Smokeless industry

Myanmar stood third place in choosing the best tourist destinations of the world for 2012, CNN broadcast on 28 December last year. Myanmar Tourism Association has also estimated that the year 2012 will see some 500,000 tourists as the number is likely to increase by 20 percent compared with the previous year.

Tourism is such a lucrative business for a country that it is known as smokeless industry. Unlike in the previous eras, today's Myanmar has seen more progress in the tourism industry due to its significant political changes, State peace and stability, places of interest, the hospitality, culture and customs of the people.

For the emergence of a good smokeless industry in Myanmar, the government is taking all necessary measures for the convenience of tourists such as entry, transport, hotel standard, interest point, mobile phone services, taxi, border pass, package tour and tourism agency.

To attract more tourists, however, we have to do more for continued development of the nation's tourism. We need to take measures to prevent the historic sites and buildings from being spoilt, address tourism-related problems and consider any points to take lesson.

As a guest will come to us only when we show him our hospitality, we need to try our best in our respective fields to provide tourists good services. Surely, tourists will come en masse to Myanmar as they have seen remarkable changes and developments in the country.

Although about 500,000 tourists are estimated to visit Myanmar this year, the number is nothing compared with the neighbours – 14 million in Thailand, 4 million in Vietnam and 2 million each in Cambodia and Laos.

Anyhow, Myanmar will become a country of smokeless industry that appeals to more tourists than its neighbours as the international community has paid more attention to our country due to marked changes and development.

Fourteen still missing from Italian ship disaster

GIGLIO, 16 Jan—Rescue workers searched the half submerged hulk of a capsized Italian cruise ship for 14 people still missing Monday, more than 48 hours after the huge vessel capsized, killing at least six and injuring more than 60.

Three people, a South Korean honeymoon couple and a member of the ship's crew, were rescued Sunday and police divers also recovered the bodies of two elderly men, still wearing emergency life jackets.

A sixth body, that of an adult male passenger, was found just before dawn Monday, according to Italian television.

Nine passengers, one of them a young child according to Italian media, and five crew members were still unaccounted for from the disaster off Italy's west coast.

The captain of the 114,500 tone Costa Concordia was arrested Saturday, accused of manslaughter and abandoning his ship before all of the more than 4,200 passengers and crew had been evacuated.

Francesco Schettino's employers, Costa Crociere, said in a statement Sunday that he appeared to have made "serious errors of judgment" and had brought the ship too close to

The disaster occurred when the ship struck a rock as dinner was being served Friday night, triggering scenes of panic that witnesses said were like the film "Titanic" with passengers jostling to get on lifeboats and some leaping into the icy sea.

Two NATO service members die in Afghanistan

KABUL, 16 Jan—Two service members with the NATO-led force died Sunday in southern Afghanistan.

"Two International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) service members died as a result of a non-battle related injury in southern Afghanistan today," ISAF said in a Press release.

The brief release did not provide details and the nationalities of the victims, saying "it is ISAF policy to defer casualty identification procedures to the relevant national authorities."

Troops mainly from the US, Britain and Australia have stationed in the southern region to fight Taliban militants.

The latest casualties brings the number of foreign soldiers killed in Afghanistan to 15 this year.

A total of 566 NATO soldiers, with majority of them Americans, were killed in Afghanistan in 2011.

Iran OPEC government warns Arab oil producers

TEHERAN, 16 Jan—Iran's Gulf Arab neighbours should not raise their production to replace Iranian oil if the European Union goes ahead with a ban on Iranian crude imports, Iran's OPEC governor said on Sunday.

The EU has agreed in principle to ban imports of Iranian oil, while the United States has pressured Asian buyers to reduce imports to starve Teheran of revenue for its disputed nuclear programme.

Asian leaders from some of Iran's biggest oil sales markets are already touring the Middle East to secure supplies, as tension over Iran's nuclear plans builds, while European buyers may rely more heavily on Arab oil producers should an EU ban come into effect.

Iran OPEC Governor Mohammad Ali Khatibi said Teheran would see any move to fill in for Iranian crude as Gulf Arab oil producers siding with Iran's western opponents.

"If the oil producing Gulf states give the green light to replacing Iran's oil these countries would be the main culprits for whatever happens in the region — including the Strait of Hormuz," Khatibi told the Sharq daily newspaper.

"Our Arab neighbour countries should not cooperate with these adventurers... These measures will not be perceived as friendly." EU countries have proposed "grace periods" on existing contracts of one to 12 months to allow companies to find alternative suppliers before implementing an embargo.

Khatibi, a key part of Iran's OPEC negotiating team, said there was a good chance that the EU would not go through with its threat to ban Iranian crude imports if Gulf Arab producers refused to back it.

Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ali al-Naimi said on Saturday the world's biggest oil exporter was ready and able to meet any increase in demand, without making any reference to sanctions on OPEC rival Iran.

Pakistan frees detained Iranian border guards

TEHERAN, 16 Jan—A Pakistani court has released three Iranian border guards detained earlier this month for inadvertently crossing into southwestern Pakistan while chasing drug traffickers, Iranian satellite Press TV reported Sunday.

The three Iranian guards were freed on Saturday after a Pakistani judge in Pakistan's southwestern Balochistan Province ordered their release, said the report.

According to the report, the released guards shot dead Pakistani national Saeed Ahmed Rigi and injured his brother Salam Rigi in an exchange of fire on 31 Dec, 2011 in the Mazan Sar Mashkail area of the Washuk District, situated 3 km inside Pakistan.

They were charged with murder after the father of the slain Pakistani man filed a case against them.

The parents of the victim pardoned the three guards on Saturday on condition of blood money. The court further imposed a penalty of 9,000 rupees (about 99.67 US dollars) on each of the three Iranians for illegal entry into the Pakistani territory.

Iranian Border Police Commander Brigadier General Hossein Zolfagari said on 3 Jan that three Iranian border guards had been detained by Pakistani forces after mistakenly crossing into the Pakistani territory when chasing smugglers at night, according to Press TV.

Malaria kills 98 Cambodians, down 35 percent in 2011

PHNOM PENH, 16 Jan—Malaria had killed 98 Cambodians in 2011, a decline of 35 percent from 151 deaths in a year earlier, said a senior health official on Monday.

Last year, some 62,690 cases of malaria had been reported, said Char Meng Chuor, the director of the National Centre for Malaria.

"We see our remarkable success in fighting malaria in the past year—despite the rise in malaria cases, the death toll has declined up to 35 percent," he told Xinhua over telephone. "This is thanks to people's awareness about the symptoms of the disease and they have timely sought medical treatment."

He said that with this good result, the country would definitely be able to completely eradicate the death of malaria by 2015.

"To achieve this target, we need the budget of 20 million US dollars a year in the next four years," he said.

Malaria is a mosquito-borne infectious disease. In Cambodia, the disease is often found in rainy season and mostly happens in border provinces, forest and mountainous provinces such as Pursat, Ratanakiri, Mondulakiri, Kampong Cham, and Preah Vihear.

Girl killed in Beirut building collapse

BEIRUT, 16 Jan—A 15-year-old girl was killed and at least seven people were injured on Sunday when an old six-storey apartment block collapsed in the Lebanese Capital, the national ANI news agency reported.

It said the girl was gravely hurt when the building in the eastern Ashrafiyeh district came down, and that she died later in hospital. The known injured were her grand-mother, three Lebanese including a man of 73, two Sudanese and a Filipina.

The news agency said an unknown number of people were buried under the rubble, and emergency services were scrambling to find survivors.

Neighbours said dozens of people had lived in the building. "It was like an earthquake" when the block collapsed, one witness told the local MTV channel.

ANI said the building had been in a state of disrepair made worse by recent torrential downpours.

PERTH, 16 Jan—Researchers in Australia called for health warnings on caffeine-loaded energy drinks following a spike in the number of people reporting medical problems after drinking them. Health professionals from the University of Sydney's Medical School and the New South Wales Poisons Information Centre said reports of adverse reactions to drinks like Red Bull and V jumped from just 12 in 2004 to 65 in 2010.

Over the seven years to 2010, 297 calls for assistance were recorded with at least 128 people hospitalised with symptoms including heart palpitations, agitation and stomach upsets. Of these, 20 people had more serious issues, such as seizures and hallucinations.

The study, published in the Medical Journal of Australia on Monday, said the average person affected was 17 years old and that they often mixed energy drinks with alcohol. "Our study demonstrates the extent of the growing problem in Australia with energy drink consumption and toxicity, particularly among adolescents," the study's authors wrote.

"Given the clear evidence of toxicity and the growing number of hospitalisations associated with consumption of energy drinks... health authorities should increase awareness of the problem, improve package labelling and regulate caffeine content."

They recommended that "labelling and any marketing of these products should include appropriate health warnings and the national poisons hotline number". A can of energy drink may contain up to 300 milligrams of caffeine — compared to an average 65-120mg for a cup of drip coffee — and Poisons Centre medical director Naren Gunja called for more thorough regulation.

Costs of removing faulty breast implants to be covered in Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO, 16 Jan—The Brazilian government said Friday that public and private healthcare systems will cover the costs of removal or replacement of faulty PIP and Rofil breast implants.

Health Minister Alexandre Padilha told reporters that there is no need for all patients who received PIP and Rofil breast implants to undergo the replacement surgery. Only those with ruptured implants will need to have them replaced.

"Women should head to the healthcare services to make an evaluation and find out if they need to undergo surgery," he said.

Next week, Health Ministry will announce the full instructions which the patients who received PIP or Rofil implants need to follow to get checked by a doctor, but patients can already set up evaluations, via public or private healthcare systems.

Meanwhile, National Health Surveillance Agency has established procedures to determine how to punish the importers of PIP and Rofil implants.—Xinhua

Too much or too little iron bad for brain

WASHINGTON, 16 Jan—Iron plays a vital role in the development of the brain — too little can result in cognitive problems, too much promotes degenerative diseases such as Alzheimer's and Parkinson's. Iron deficiency is the most common nutritional deficiency worldwide, causing poor cognitive achievement in school-aged children. Now it has been found to affect the brain's physical structure as well.

Paul Thompson, professor of neurology at the University of California Los Angeles, and colleagues measured levels of transferrin, a protein that transports iron throughout the body and brain, in adolescents.

Since both a deficiency and an excess of iron can negatively impact brain function, the body's regulation of iron transport to the brain is crucial, the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences reports. When iron levels are low, the liver produces more transferrin for increased iron transport. The researchers wanted to know whether brain structure in healthy adults was also dependent on transferrin levels, according to a California statement.

"We found that healthy brain wiring in adults depended on having good iron levels in your teenage years," said Thompson, member of California's Lab of Neuro Imaging. "This connection was a lot stronger than we expected, especially as we were looking at people who were young and healthy - none of them would be considered iron-deficient."

"We also found a connection with a gene that explains why this is so. The gene itself seems to affect brain wiring, which was a big surprise," he said.

Shares fall as euro zone downgrades rekindle fears

TOKYO, 16 Jan—Asian shares fell on Monday on fears that mass sovereign debt rating cuts by Standard & Poor's would further aggravate euro zone funding difficulties, threatening to derail progress in resolving the debt crisis.

Worries that European financial troubles would and drag down global growth and sap appetite for commodities weighed on industrial metals such as copper, while a shift to perceived safe haven assets boosted Japanese government bonds.

MSCI's broadest index of Asia Pacific shares outside Japan fell 1.3 percent to its lowest in about one week, after reaching a one-month high on Friday. Japan's Nikkei average shed 1.4 percent to a one-month low.

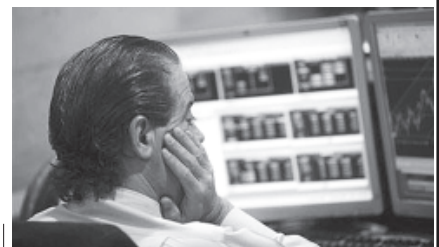

US markets are closed on Monday for the Martin Luther King holiday, but S&P 500 futures traded in Asia fell 0.5 percent.

Tracking the Asian trend, European shares were set for a decline, with financial spreadbetters forecasting Britain's FTSE 100, Germany's DAX and France's CAC-40 would open down around 0.4-0.5 percent.

China's CPI to rise around 4 percent in 2012

BEIJING, 16 Jan—The overall price level in 2012 may see a downward trend, however, the consumer price index (CPI) is predicted to rise around 4 percent in China, according to the nation's lead economists. Zhuang Jian, a senior economist with Asian Development Bank, anticipated that the overall CPI growth will stay around 4 percent, besides a certain degree of fluctuation in monthly figures.

As a result of diminishing carryover effects and the government's prudent monetary policy direction, CPI in China has been declining over the past five months, but price control remains a dominant topic right now.

China's CPI was up 5.4 percent in 2011 from the previous year, according to a statement issued by the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS). Although the figure is well above the government's full-year control target of 4 percent, inflation has been slowing down in the second half of 2011 thanks to a series of government measures.

MOSCOW, 16 Jan—Russia's failed Mars probe Phobos-Grunt has fallen into the Pacific Ocean, local media reported Sunday. The crash site of the spacecraft debris was 1,250 kilometres west of the Wellington Island of Chile, said Russian Aerospace Defence Forces spokesman Col Alexei Zolotukhin.

He told Itar-Tass news agency that Russia's space control network was monitoring the process of the falling which happened at 9:45 pm Moscow time (1745 GMT). Earlier, experts said the 14-ton spacecraft carrying 11 tons of toxic rocket fuel might land somewhere in the southern Atlantic.

Most of the debris was expected to burn up in the atmosphere, but 20 to 30 chunks of charred debris, weighing about 200 kg, could make it to the surface, while the toxic fuel would burn in the atmosphere at a height of about 100 km, said Russia's Federal Space Agency Roscosmos earlier in a projection for the crash.

Saturn-like ringed planet found eclipsing sun-like star

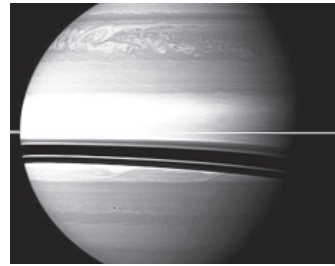

WASHINGTON, 16 Jan—A Saturn-like ringed planet in the constellation Centaurus has been discovered orbiting a sun-like star.

The scientists, led by Assistant Professor of Physics and Astronomy Eric Mamajek of Rochester and the Cerro Tololo Inter-American Observatory, used data from the international SuperWASP (Wide Angle Search for Planets) and All Sky Automated Survey (ASAS) project to study the light curves of young Sun-like stars in the Scorpius-Centaurus association—the nearest region of recent massive star formation to the Sun.

A light curve is a graph of light intensity over time, and one star in particular showed dramatic changes during a 54 day period in early 2007.

University of Rochester graduate student Mark Pecaut and Mamajek discovered the unusual eclipse in December 2010.

"When I first saw the light curve, I knew we had found a very weird and unique object. After we ruled out the eclipse being due to a spherical star or a circumstellar disk passing in front of the star, I realized that the only plausible explanation was some sort of dust ring system orbiting a smaller companion—basically a 'Saturn on steroids,'" said Mamajek. If a spherical object merely passed in front of the star, the intensity of the light would gradually dim and reach a low point before gradually increasing. That was not the case with the star identified as 1SWASP J140747.93-394542.6.

The Rochester team discovered a long, deep, and complex eclipse event with significant on-and-off dimming. At the deepest parts of the eclipse, at least 95 percent of the light from the star was being blocked by dust.

The shape of the light curve was very similar to that of a well-researched star (EE Cephei), suggesting similar traits in the companion objects.

Even birds can't resist a good yawn

Not just humans but birds also find yawns irresistible, say a researcher. INTERNET

LONDON, 16 Jan—Not just humans but birds also find yawns irresistible, say a researcher. Andrew Gallup at Binghamton University in New York found that budgies, the highly social birds, also make contagious yawn, New Scientist reported.

Many animals yawn, but only humans and a few other primates are known to trigger cascades of yawns around a group. For his finding Gallup watched 21 budgies over 15 days and counted their yawns—a wide-open beak and slightly closed eyes, followed by a brief stretch of the neck.

He found each bird yawned one to three times an hour, but was more likely to do so if their neighbour had just yawned. Gallup says it's the first good evidence for contagious yawning in a non-primate.

His unpublished work also revealed that their yawns are more contagious after a sudden loud noise, suggesting yawning might help coordinate group alertness in the face of a threat.—Internet

Censoring social media curbs free speech, netizens says

NEW DELHI, 16 Jan—The Indian government's decision to prosecute social networking sites like Google and Facebook has triggered public anger, with netizens saying the move is tantamount to clamping down on constitutional rights of free speech and individual liberty.

"This censorship is totally useless, the government is trying to curb freedom of speech and expression, which is everyone's right," Kartik Dayanand, a social media consultant and blogger, told.

The government Friday gave the green signal to proceed against 21 social networking sites for hosting "objectionable content" promoting enmity between groups and harming national interest.

But most people view this censorship as an excuse to curb freedom of expression.

Anirudh Salve, a content writer, said: "Social media provides ultimate freedom space for people who want to express themselves. By snatching this freedom, the government is trying to spoil the basic tenets of democracy, which is not acceptable."

"Inflammatory content on internet cannot be accepted. It hurts some people's sentiments, but this is no way to rectify that problem. Putting curbs on these websites will hamper our sense of liberty," said Jatin Panchi, an engineering student from Indraprastha University. Freelance writer Pooja Kapur told IANS: "Censoring content on social media sites is totally unjustified. How different would we be from China or Afghanistan then?"

Others felt that there should be some control over the internet, but only to a certain extent. Vedika Nandan, a model, said: "I think censoring of the internet is good, but to a certain extent."—Internet

The king was admitted to hospital in September 2009 for treatment of a respiratory condition and has rarely left since then, aside from a few public appearances including a public speech in early December on his birthday.

Any discussion of the royal family is extremely sensitive in politically turbulent Thailand, where the palace has been silent over the organization of the eventual succession.

Britain education secretary determined to push forward school reforms

LONDON, 16 Jan—Britain's education secretary said on Sunday for British students to move up their rankings in the international community, the exams must be tougher and schools must work harder, though the ambition could take a decade to achieve.

Speaking to the BBC Sunday Politics show, Education Secretary Michael Gove said he is prepared to see a fall in the number of A-level passes as the price for making the exams tougher. Grade inflation "discredits the integrity of our education system" and the General Certificate of Secondary Education (GCSE)'s A-levels and degrees must get "tougher", Gove said.

"What I hope we will see is our exams are once again trusted across the globe and our children are among the best in the world," he added. The British government is eager to improve the country's position in the international education league tables, which in 2011 put Britain 17th for reading, 24th for mathematics in the world. The education secretary, meanwhile, said a 10-year period would be needed for Britain's position in international education league tables to improve.

"We do need to climb up that league table, but I think it will take about 10 years before we can begin to see the fruits of all the reforms we're making, which will lead to a turnaround in the league tables," he said. Gove also mentioned he would use a number of short-term measures to judge the success of his education policies.

These includes more students taking "rigorous subjects," more headteachers taking advantage of academy powers, and more independent schools choosing to join the state sector.—Xinhua

Police officials and the French embassy in Phnom Penh told AFP that it was impossible to immediately identify the victims because of the badly decomposed state of their bodies.

"Now we are appealing for witnesses who may recognise the clothes and the shoes we found in the car. Educated Naga nationals have emerged in large numbers who are now serving the nation both in military and civil fields. Naga nationals are benefitting from the government's efforts for promotion of education standard in accord with the motto "Higher education standard, better socio-economic status." There are six re-transmission stations in the region, enabling the locals to keep in touch with the world and the other parts of the country. Bullfighting thriving in Himalayas

KATHMANDU, 16 Jan—A half-tonne bull enters the ring, snorting and rearing, before running at full pelt towards a section of spectators, drawing screams of fear and delight from the frenzied crowd.

It could be a scene from any Spanish arena but this is bullfighting Nepal-style, with thousands trekking deep into the Himalayan foothills to watch a centuries-old spectacle whose popularity is growing even as its appeal wanes in Europe.

Every year thousands of Nepalis come to see the animals fight at a festival marking Maghe Sankranti, the first day of the tenth month in the nation's calendar when villagers celebrate an end to winter and usher in warmer weather.

Unlike its European cousin, there are no matadors — the beasts take on each other — and buffalo are preferred to traditional bulls, which are sacred in the Hindu-majority country. "Bull fights have been happening all around here for a long time. My grandfather used to say they have been going on for more than 200 years," said Janak Raj Dhungana, who organizes the fiesta in the village of Taruka, 80 kilometres (50 miles) north of the Capital Kathmandu.

"The fights used to happen in different places around Nuwakot District. But six years ago we brought them all together for one big fight here."

Seven pairs of bulls did battle in a ring overlooking the spectacular terraced hillsides, fertile valleys and terracotta tiled roofs of Nuwakot in front of a crowd of 5,000 perched on grass banks and muddy slopes on Sunday.

This was not as lucrative as the Spanish circuit, with winning owners receiving prize money of 1,000 rupees ($12) from the village authorities and the losers getting half that.

The buffalo are selected when they are calves and trained only to fight at the annual fiesta, being spared the ploughing duties their less tenacious siblings are reared for.

Australia's unemployment rate forecast to rise in 2012

SYDNEY, 16 Jan— Australia is expected to have a higher jobless rate in 2012, the nation's major bank ANZ Bank said on Monday. The total number of job advertisements in Australia on the Internet and in newspapers dropped 0.9 percent in December compared with the previous month, contributing to a 2.6 percent annual fall, ANZ said.

ANZ head of Australian economics Katie Dean said the figures point to modest employment gains for the Australian economy over the coming months.

"Indeed, the current trend rate of employment growth is unlikely to be fast enough to absorb the forecast growth in the labor force in the short term," Dean said.

Carbon dioxide affecting fish brains

MELBOURNE, 16 Jan—Rising human carbon dioxide emissions may be affecting the brains and central nervous systems of sea fish, with serious consequences for their survival, according to new research. Carbon dioxide concentrations predicted to occur in the ocean by the end of this century will interfere with fishes' ability to hear, smell, turn and evade predators, the research found. The Australian Research Council's Centre of Excellence for Coral Reef Studies said it had been testing the performance of baby coral fish in sea water containing higher levels of dissolved CO₂ for several years. "And it is now pretty clear that they sustain significant disruption to their central nervous system, which is likely to impair their chances of survival," said Phillip Munday, a professor who reported the findings.

In a paper published in the journal Nature Climate Change, Munday and his colleagues also detail what they say is world-first evidence that high CO₂ levels in sea water disrupts a key brain receptor in fish.

This causes marked changes in their behaviour and sensory abilities. "We've found that elevated CO₂ in the oceans can directly interfere with fish neurotransmitter functions, which poses a direct and previously unknown threat to sea life," said Munday. The team began by studying how baby clown and damselfishes performed alongside their predators in CO₂-enriched water.—Internet

Bodies of snowmobilers pulled from Minnesota lake

MINNEAPOLIS, 16 Jan—Divers recovered the bodies of two men Sunday whose snowmobile sank after hitting open water on a lake near the Twin Cities, the first thin-ice related deaths reported in Minnesota in a mild winter that has left ice unreliable across the state.

Dozens of people have fallen into frigid waters around Minnesota this winter as unseasonably warm temperatures have weakened ice and in some cases left patches of open water such as those on Lake Charlotte northwest of Minneapolis.

"It was a single snowmobile and it appears to have just run right into open water," said Captain Greg Howell of the Wright County Sheriff's Office. "It's been a bad year for ice." Howell said divers recovered the bodies of two young adult men Sunday afternoon and were withholding their names pending a positive identification and notification of family members.

A 66-year-old man from Buffalo, Minnesota, riding an all-terrain vehicle had reported seeing a snowmobile drop into the lake on Saturday night, went to investigate and was rescued by a neighbor when his ATV also sank into the water, Howell said.—Reuters

China basketball star Yao Ming enters politics

SHANGHAI, 16 Jan—Not content with owning a basketball team, studying business and making wine, China's former NBA superstar Yao Ming has now become the youngest—and tallest—legislative advisor in Shanghai.

The 31-year-old was formally accepted as a member of an advisory body to Shanghai's legislature at the weekend—a position that entitles him to make proposals for possible new laws—the official China Daily reported.

towering above other newly selected members of the advisory body—his latest venture since he formally retired from the Houston Rockets in July.

"Raising proposals is very serious business and I do not want to be hasty," Yao was quoted as saying.

Since July, Yao's busy schedule has involved him going back to school for a university degree in business management and helping manage the Shanghai Sharks, a Chinese basketball team.

In November, he also set up a company to sell his own brand of wine using grapes from California's famed Napa Valley, and his new role in politics has sparked concern Yao may be taking on too much. But Zhang Chi, a spokesman for the Shanghai Sharks, dismissed these worries.—Internet

ROK, Oman to cooperate to stabilize oil supply to Seoul

SEOUL, 16 Jan—South Korea and Oman have agreed to cooperate to ensure stable oil and gas supply to Seoul while the country seeks a waiver of toughened US sanctions on Iran and weighs up options, including reducing crude imports from Teheran.

South Korea, the world's fifth-largest importer of crude, buys 10 percent of its oil from Iran and 2 percent from Oman. Prime Minister Kim Hwang-sik visited Oman over the weekend before heading to the United Arab Emirates for oil supply talks. "Both sides have agreed to closely cooperate to continue stable energy supply, including liquefied natural gas and crude oil in the face of instability in the international crude oil markets," the Prime Minister's Office said in a statement, referring to the meetings between Oman and South Korea.—MNA/Reuters

British man has passport tattooed on back

A British man had his passport tattooed on his back and even used the image as an ID to take money out of the bank, he said.

Richard Ashton, 27, told The Sun he had his passport inked on his back while backpacking in Australia in 2006.

"I wanted something to remember my holiday by, but also wanted something patriotic," he said. "My girlfriend at the time thought I was a bit daft, but eventually she found it hilarious. That seems to be the general reaction."

The London personal trainer said when he ran out of cash on his trip to Australia, he took off his shirt at a bank to use as ID.

"The cashier gave me a strange look. She typed in my name and details after reading my tattoo and allowed me $50."

Ashton, who was born in Sydney and holds dual citizenship, said he keeps his tattoo covered up most of the time.

"I don't walk around with my top off."

British officials said Ashton couldn't use the tattoo as ID to go abroad or enter Britain.

Town's patience with wild boars wears out

An Italian resort town overrun with wild boars has granted residents the right to shoot them on sight, local officials said.

Spokesman for the Town of Alassio, Paolo Ripamonti, told the ANSA news agency the boars have worn out their quirky cachet by digging up and ruining gardens, causing traffic accidents and striking fear into children and adults.

The town is in the Liguria Region on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea near the French border and has a strong tourism industry, which the boars were threatening, Ripamonti said. "The population was exasperated," he said.

Culling the boars has a bonus for the hunters — the animals, originally related to pigs, are considered a delicacy in Italy, ANSA said.

French librarians encourage copying

A group of French librarians is urging patrons to make copies of books and DVDs they check out despite the government crackdown on piracy.

The effort is led by a librarian-blogger who argues the new law against illegal downloads does not apply to material found at public libraries.

"What is the first objective of a library? It's to distribute books and works of art," the blogger, identified as Silvae, wrote recently. The Local said Silvae has been encouraging library patrons to organize copying parties complete with computers and cameras to record the content of books, CDs and DVDs.

France enacted restrictions in 2009 that allow authorities to cut off Internet service to users who repeatedly download protected material.

Riina's victims during his criminal career included at least two magistrates.

'Contraband' swipes No 1 spot at box office

LOS ANGELES, 16 Jan— "Contraband" managed to steal the top slot away from competitors at the weekend box office.

The Universal action drama film starring Mark Wahlberg as a reformed smuggler debuted above expectations at No 1 with $24 million, while Disney's 3-D rerelease of "Beauty and the Beast" waltzed into the No 2 position with $18.5 million, according to studio estimates Sunday. Both films helped boost Hollywood's business after a sluggish holiday season.

"It's great to have an uptick in the total box office, and Universal is thrilled that 'Contraband' was the driving force behind that," said Nikki Rocco, head of distribution for the studio. "I think it's combination of a great marketing campaign, audiences love Mark Wahlberg and (producer) Working Title made a terrific movie, particularly for the cost." —INTERNET

Two Calif children promote indie film

BURBANK, 16 Jan— Two young California girls say they were so inspired by the indie film "The First Grader" they've started a campaign to get it considered for an Oscar.

The movie, based on the true story of an 84-year-old Kenyan man willing to sit in an elementary classroom with 6-year-olds to exercise his right to a free education, was a hit at film festivals but failed to find an audience in its theatrical release, the Burbank (Calif) Leader reported on Saturday.

But when sisters Allie and Olivia Shea, ages 11 and 8, saw the movie, its inspirational message hit home and they asked their father to help them launch the Shea Family Foundation to promote the film.

"I must admit I was not really aware of how important the whole awards season can be," said Darin Shea, an information technology entrepreneur who moved his family from Arkansas to Burbank two years ago to support his children's acting ambitions. —INTERNET

This is "Iron Lady's" third week in release, but last week, it was in only five locations.

With the wider release, its per-location average dropped from an unsustainably high $34,420 to a very strong $6,716.

Henry and Hughes make losing returns

LONDON, 16 Jan—Swansea City turned on the style to beat Arsenal 3-2 and deny Thierry Henry a magical return to the Premier League and Mark Hughes made a losing start as manager of struggling Queens Park Rangers on Sunday. Arsenal stayed fifth in the table, four points behind Chelsea and 12 adrift of leaders Manchester City who have a game in hand and play at Wigan Athletic on Monday. Swansea moved up to 10th.

The league's top scorer Robin van Persie put the Gunners ahead in the fifth minute but the Londoners' hopes of closing the gap between them and the Champions League places suffered a setback when Scott Sinclair equalised from the penalty spot 11 minutes later. Nathan Dyer fired the Welsh side in front on 57 minutes at a chilly Liberty Stadium, Theo Walcott came good with an equaliser in the 69th but Danny Graham hit back straight from the re-start.

Inter down Milan to reignite Serie A title race title after his side earned a crucial 1-0 win away to champions AC Milan to squeeze the top of the table. Inter's win, coupled with Juventus's 1-1 draw at home to Cagliari, means the top five are now separated by just six points.

Ranieri freely admitted that his side were back in the mix but refused to discuss the title. "I've said it since day one, I won't talk about (the title) due to modesty and superstition," he said. "The first thing for us was that it was important to get into the Europa League zone and we've done that. "Next up is the Champions League zone. We have it in our blood and in our DNA to fight for the top positions. But we'll keep going slowly because we're doing well but we still need to improve." Barcelona battle to cut Real lead to five points

BARCELONE, 16 Jan—Barcelona squandered a two-goal lead before seeing off 10-man Real Betis 4-2 to cut Real Madrid's lead at the top of La Liga back to five points on Sunday. Two goals from Lionel Messi and a goal apiece from Xavi and Alexis Sanchez fired them to the victory after Ruben Castro and Roque Santa Cruz had levelled. Betis had Mario Vazquez sent off with the score at 2-2 with 20 minutes remaining and Barca never looked back.

Now the focus is turned to the Spanish Cup on Wednesday when the two giants face each other in the first leg of a quarter-final tie. Real Madrid had come from behind on Saturday to win 2-1 at Mallorca with late goals from Gonzalo Higuain and Jose Callejon. "The cup is a different competition so we have to change our mentality. What we do know is we will go all out to get through the tie," said Xavi.

"We have no doubts about our play, although we know we can play better or worse than tonight. Our philosophy is always the same, we go out to attack. We were eight points behind Madrid and Betis made it difficult for us because they wanted the ball."

Barca coach Pep Guardiola added of Wednesday's game: "It's always good to go into a game on the back of a win, but we know who we are up against and we'll try to play the best game we can." Betis started the better team in the Camp Nou and tested Victor Valdes twice in the opening minutes.

This only served to wake up the home team when Xavi, playing his 400th league game for the club, gave them the lead on 10 minutes, following up after a Cesc Fabregas shot had hit the post. Two minutes later and Barca were two goals ahead when Messi steered the ball home after good work on the left from Sanchez.—Internet

Li Na, Sun Yang win China's CCTV Sports Personality of Year 2011

BEIJING, 16 Jan—Though both absent from the 2011 CCTV (China Central Television) Sports Personality Awarding Ceremony, China's leading women tennis ace Li Na and swimming world champion Sun Yang dominated the Best Athlete Awards at the National Stadium here on Sunday.

Li Na and Sun Yang

Li, 29, made history as the first Asian and Chinese tennis player to enter a Grand Slam singles final in 2011 Australian Open. Later in June, Li was crowned as the first-ever Grand Slam title for China and Asia in the French Open final, downing defending champion Francesca Schiavone of Italy 6-4, 7-6(0).

Li was voted the Best Female Athlete, beating the other four candidates, including diving world champion Wu Minxia, table tennis world champion Ding Ning, swimming worlds gold medalist Jiao Liuyang and world discus winner Li Yanfeng.

"I'm now in Melbourne, preparing for the Australia Open to be open here on 16 Jan. I'm happy that I'm almost 30, but I'm still hungry for winning and still focusing on tennis," Li Na said through a VCR showed on the ceremony. The 20-year-old Sun snatched the Best Male Athlete as he swept the men's 800 and 1,500 metres freestyle gold medals at the 14th FINA World Championships in Shanghai in July. Sun clocked 14 minutes 34.14 seconds in 1,500m to break the world record of 14:34.56 set by Australian Grant Hackett 10 years ago. Sun, who is training in Gold Coast in Australia, said through telephone: "I'm honoured to have this award because the other four candidates performed very well as well.
