Opportunity cost

In economics, an opportunity cost means that, in order to do one thing, you must give up something else (those something else's are the opportunity costs). If, for example, you spend time and money going to a movie, you cannot spend that time at home reading a book, and you cannot spend the money on something else. If your next-best alternative to seeing the movie is reading the book, then the opportunity cost of seeing the movie is the money spent plus the pleasure you forgo by not reading the book.

Opportunity cost comes into play in any decision that involves a tradeoff between two or more options. It is expressed as the relative cost of one alternative in terms of the next-best alternative. Opportunity costs are often overlooked in decision making. People incur opportunity costs with every decision that is made. When you decided to read this perspective, you gave up all other uses of this time. You may have given up a few minutes of your favorite television program or a phone call to a friend, or you may have even forgone the opportunity to invest or earn money.

An opportunity cost only considers the next best alternative to an action, not the entire set of alternatives. So, we must take it into consideration in decision making. Like that economic theory, we have a number of alternatives in our daily life. Among several choices, we must pick the best and most suitable one for our future life.

India to induct nuclear submarine early April

NEW DELHI, 20 March— In a major boost to its underwater strike capabilities, India will induct its Russian-built nuclear-powered submarine, Nerpa, in the first week of April.

Nerpa, which will be rechristened INS Chakra, is scheduled to arrive at its home base of Visakhapatnam in the first week of April and is expected to be commissioned formally into the Indian Navy by Defence Minister A K Antony on 5 April, Defence Ministry officials told Press Trust of India here Monday.

The submarine will be on a ten-year lease under a deal expected to be worth over US$920 million, they said.

An Indian crew had set sail with the Akula II class vessel to India in the end of January.

After the INS Chakra joins the naval fleet, it would be for the first time in more than two decades that the Indian Navy would have a nuclear attack submarine.

This will also propel India in the elite league of six nations operating nuclear submarines.

India is also working on development of indigenous nuclear submarines of the Arihant class. The first submarine, INS Arihant, was launched for sea trials recently and is expected to start operational patrols by the end of this year. The Navy will have three submarines of this class by the end of this decade. India already possesses or is in the process of developing a family of nuclear-capable missiles including the Agni series, Prithvi variants, naval missile Dhanush, and submarine-launched Sagarika.

Meanwhile, the Navy will commission the Admiral Gorshkov aircraft carrier on the Navy Day on 4 December this year in Russia.

22 killed in drug violence in south Mexico state

ACAPULCO, 20 March— Gunmen ambushed and killed 12 police officers who had been sent to search for the bodies of 10 people whose severed heads were found in southern Guerrero state, authorities said Monday.

Guerrero state police spokesman Arturo Martinez said six state and six local officers were killed Sunday night on a road leading out of the town of Teloloapan. Another 11 officers were wounded. The attack on the officers occurred as they were traveling in six patrol pickups and searching for the bodies of seven men and three women whose severed heads were dumped outside the town's slaughterhouse earlier

Sunday, Martinez said.

The heads were left with a message threatening the La Familia drug cartel, whose home base is in neighbouring Michoacan State.

Teloloapan is near the area shared by both Guerrero and Michoacan states and known as Tierra Caliente for its steamy weather.

The region is a violent, mountainous zone that has been used by drug traffickers to grow marijuana and opium poppies for years. It has been plagued by drug violence in recent years as drug gangs fight to control the area. Authorities say La Familia has been severely battered in the fighting.

Soldiers have been sent to the area but that hasn't stopped gunmen from killing priests, politicians, police chiefs, or anyone else who gets in the way.

Two years ago, nine police officers were kidnapped in Teloloapan when they were investigating the death of a man in the village of El Revelado. The bodies of eight of the officers were found days later. Six had been dismembered. One was found alive.

More than 47,000 people have died in drug violence nationwide since President Felipe Calderon began a crackdown on drug cartels in December 2006.—Internet

Sarkozy puts region on highest alert after school attack

Nicolas Sarkozy.—INTERNET

PARIS, 20 March— French President Nicolas Sarkozy said on Monday he was putting the country's southwestern region on its highest terror alert level after a shooting at a Jewish school in Toulouse left four dead.

Sarkozy said the same gunman had attacked the school and last week shot three paratroopers, that it was "obvious" Monday's attack was anti-Semitic and he was suspending his re-election campaign until at least Wednesday.

Speaking after meeting of top security officials, Sarkozy said "exceptional security measures" would be taken in the Midi-Pyrenees region and that it was being put on "scarlet" terror alert, the highest possible level.

He said riot police units and national gendarmes would maintain security in the region "as long as this criminal has not been found".

"There are already 120 investigators in Toulouse. With the prime minister, I have asked the interior and defence ministers to go to Toulouse.

The interior minister will coordinate the investigation and stay in place for as long as it takes," Sarkozy said.

The moves came after a killer shot dead three children and a teacher at a Jewish school Toulouse and police said the same gun and scooter had been used last week in the murders of three French paratroopers in the same area.

"We know that it is the same person, the same weapon that killed the soldiers, the children and the teacher," Sarkozy said, adding: "The anti-Semitic motive seems obvious." "This odious act cannot remain unpunished. All means, absolutely all means available, will be committed to neutralise this criminal," he said.

Sarkozy also said he was temporarily putting aside his campaign for re-election in an April-May presidential vote.

"I am suspending my participation in the election campaign at least until Wednesday," he said.

Officials have said all three of the killed soldiers were of North African descent and at least two were Muslims. Sarkozy said he would on Tuesday meet representatives of France's Jewish and Muslim communities.

"I will meet them together, so that we can together say that all of France is at their sides," he said.

Peru cancels British ship visit over Falklands

LIMA, 20 March— Peru canceled a visit by a British navy frigate in solidarity with Argentina's claims over the Falkland Islands. The decision underlines Peru's support for Argentina over the south Pacific archipelago, known locally as the Malvinas, Foreign Minister Rafael Roncagliolo told the official news agency Andina. The British frigate Montrose was set to dock in Lima's port of Callao on Thursday for a friendly visit.

Roncagliolo said the visit was canceled as part of an agreement with the Union of South American Nations (UNASUR) supporting Argentina. Foreign ministers from the 12 UNASUR nations on Saturday urged Britain to discuss the sovereignty of the islands with Argentina, "in line with United Nations resolutions." The British embassy in Lima said it "lamented" that Peru had canceled the invitation, noting that the Peruvian government had the chance to raise the issue with Foreign Office Minister Jeremy Browne, who was in Lima on Friday. Argentine troops seized the islands on 2 April, 1982, only to be routed by British forces 74 days later.—Internet

BAGHDAD, 20 March— At least 26 explosions struck cities and towns across Iraq on Tuesday, killing at least 49 people and wounding more than 200, despite a massive security clampdown ahead of next week's Arab League summit in Baghdad. It was Iraq's bloodiest day in nearly a month, and the breadth of coordinated bombs in more than a dozen cities showed an apparent determination by insurgents to prove that the government cannot keep the country safe ahead of the summit. Iraq is due to host the meeting for the first

US troops in December.

"The goal of today's attacks was to present a negative image of the security situation in Iraq," government spokesman Ali al-Dabbagh told Reuters.

"Security efforts will be escalated to counteract terrorist groups' attacks and to fill loopholes used by them to infiltrate security, whether in Baghdad or other provinces." Tuesday's deadliest incident occurred in the southern Shi'ite Muslim holy city of Kerbala, where twin explosions killed 13 people and wounded 48 during the morning rush hour, according to Jamal Mahdi, a Kerbala health department spokesman.

"The second explosion caused the biggest destruction. I saw body parts, fingers, hands thrown on the road," 23-year-old shop owner Muradha Ali Kadhim told Reuters.

"The security forces are stupid because they always gather at the site of an explosion and then a second explosion occurs. They become a target."

Blasts also struck in the capital, in Baiji, Baquba, Daquq, Dibis, Dhuliyia, Kirkuk, Mosul, Samarra and Tuz Khurmat to the north, in Falluja and Ramadi to the west, and Hilla, Latifiya, Mahmudiya and Mus-sayab to the south. Texting smartphone teens growing in US

WASHINGTON, 20 March—Teenagers in the United States are texting more than ever before, and they are more likely as well to have a smartphone in their hands, according to a survey released Monday.

On average, youngsters aged 12 to 17 sent 60 text messages on a typical day in 2011, 10 more than they did two years earlier, the Pew Internet and American Life Project found. Older girls were the most enthusiastic texters, sending 100 texts a day, Pew said. Boys sent exactly half that number, or 50 text a day, but even that was higher than the average of 30 texts they sent per day in 2009.

"When asked generally about how they communicate with people in their lives — not just about their friends, but about all kinds of people — teens point to text messaging as the dominant daily mode of communication," it said.

Pew also said 23 percent of the 799 youngsters who took part in its telephone survey in the continental United States in April through July last year had a smartphone, such as an iPhone or a BlackBerry.

Seventy-seven percent had a cellphone of some kind or another — little changed from 2011 but far above the 44 percent who owned cellphones in 2004.

Suburban white teenagers with parents who had at least a high school education, living in homes with a total income of more than $75,000, were more likely than others to have a cellphone, the Pew researchers found.—Internet

Microsoft says no new Xbox coming anytime soon

NEW YORK, 20 March—Microsoft says it's not coming out with a new Xbox gaming console anytime soon.

Some video game players had hoped that Microsoft Corp would unveil an upgrade at the E3 Expo in June, a big, yearly video game conference in Los Angeles where game makers show off new wares and titles.

Microsoft Corp said on Monday that it won't be discussing new Xbox hardware at the event. Rather, it plans to focus on games, music and other entertainment for the Xbox 360, which came out in 2005.

Nintendo Co will be showcasing the Wii U, the successor to the Wii. Unlike the Xbox 360 or the PlayStation 3, the current Wii doesn't offer high-definition graphics, so it's in greater need of an upgrade.

Space tech helps create safer automobiles

PARIS, 20 March—A thin foil sensor developed to detect the pressure on a spacecraft's wings during re-entry is now helping build safer cars, European researchers say.

German automaker Volkswagen is using the flexible "space foil" as a super-thin and accurate sensor to measure every deformation sustained by cars during crash tests, a release from the Paris headquarters of the European Space Agency reported.

In the early 1990s, European engineers turned to "piezoelectric" foil, intended for spacecraft use, because regular instruments were too bulky and added too much drag.

Piezoelectric materials can convert physical effects such as vibration and pressure into minute electric pulses, making them ideal as extremely lightweight sensors able to cover an entire surface without distorting the results by adding drag.

VW was attracted to the material because the space sensors would solve a problem encountered in crash tests: sensors on cars are often destroyed upon impact, making it difficult to collect highly accurate data throughout the crash process.

The thin, flexible piezoelectric sensors are simply applied to the car's surfaces and move with the metal as the car crashes rather than being destroyed by the impact.

"We wanted to know at which moment which parts of the car are deformed," VW engineer Jens Weinrich said. At the end of each

Die-offs of honeybees critical for pollinating food crops — part of so-called colony collapse disorder — is linked to an insecticide, a US journal reports.—INTERNET

Insecticides linked to honeybee die-offs

WASHINGTON, 20 March—Die-offs of honeybees critical for pollinating food crops — part of so-called colony collapse disorder — is linked to an insecticide, a US journal reports.

Researchers from the University of Padua in Italy writing in the journal Environmental Science & Technology say the springtime die-offs have been linked to technology used to plant corn coated with insecticides.

In some parts of Europe where farmers use the technology to plant seeds coated with so-called neonicotinoid insecticides, widespread deaths of honeybees have been reported since the introduction of the technique in the late 1990s, they said.

Such insecticides are among the most widely used in the world, popular because they kill insects by paralyzing nerves but have lower toxicity for other animals.

Scientists said they suspected the bee die-offs might be due to particles of the insecticide made airborne by the pneumatic drilling machines used for planting that forcefully suck seeds in and expel a burst of air containing high concentrations of particles of the insecticide coating. They found that honeybees that flew through the emission cloud of the seeding machines used in mid-March to May corn planting were dying.

Future work on the problem should focus on a way to prevent the seeds from fragmenting inside the pneumatic drilling machines, the researchers said.

Park wants to display more dino tracks

HARTFORD, 20 March—Dinosaur tracks in Connecticut uncovered in 1966 but reburied in 1976 to protect them from the elements should be seen once again, state geologists say. Dinosaur State Park near Hartford displays 600 footprints from the Jurassic period under a dome, but the 1,500 additional footprints not seen in 36 years should also be uncovered and made available for public viewing, they argue.

They want to unearth the buried tracks and enclose them in a protective, permanent shelter for inspection by scientists and the public. "There's been a whole generation of scientists who have never looked at them," Dinosaur State Park Director Margaret Enkler told The Hartford Courant. "The number of people who have seen the full trackway is getting smaller and smaller."

Enkler and her colleagues are making their case this week before the northeastern section meeting of the Geological Society of America in Hartford. Dinosaur State Park, listed as a Registered Natural Landmark by the US Department of the Interior, draws about 50,000 visitors a year. "The Connecticut Valley is literally a treasure trove of Jurassic Age fossils," geologist Nicholas G McDonald said.

Uncovering the buried footprints could renew interest in the park, he said, and the larger trackway would offer field experience for younger scientists and science educators.

"There really is a need today as an educator to get away from the computer. So much science now you do on your laptop, and the thing that turned me onto geology was being outdoors," he said.—Internet

Planets are particular about orbits

TUCSON, 20 March—Planets forming around stars tend to pile up at certain distances, creating some crowded orbits while other regions remain empty, US astronomers say.

Some orbital zones around new stars tend to attract numbers of giant planets and computer simulations suggest the reason may be high-energy radiation streaming from the stars, they said.

The radiation creates gaps in the protoplanetary disks of gas and dust swirling around young stars in a process called photo-evaporation, where ultraviolet light and other high-energy photons from the star heat the disk material.

Supercomputer models reveal "that the final distribution of planets does not vary smoothly with distance from the star, but instead has clear 'deserts' — deficits of planets — and 'pileups' of planets at particular locations," study co-author Ilaria Pascucci at the University of Arizona told SPACE.com

Giant planets migrate inward, dragged by protoplanetary material falling toward the star, but one they encounter a gap cleared by photo-evaporation they stop their inward movement, taking up a stable orbit around the star, she said.—Internet

'East Asian gene' resistant to cancer drugs

SINGAPORE, 20 March—Scientists in Singapore have uncovered the reason some patients are resistant to some cancer drugs. They pin it down to a particular gene in people of East Asian descent. The team, led by researchers from Duke-NUS Graduate Medical School, has discovered that about 15 percent of East Asians display this gene. It is estimated some 14,000 newly-diagnosed leukaemia and lung cancer patients each year will carry the gene variant.

But the scientists found they could overcome the problem by adding a new class of drugs to current therapies. Duke-NUS Graduate Medical School senior vice dean Patrick Casey said: "This discovery allows one to begin to match appropriate medications to patients very quickly." The next step is to bring the new discovery to clinical trials.—Internet

Prostate, baldness drugs to include cancer warning

TORONTO, 20 March—Health Canada is warning that two popular medications used to treat baldness and enlarged prostates may put men at an increased risk of a serious form of prostate cancer, known as high-grade prostate cancer.

The agency warned Monday that finasteride and dutasteride can increase the risk for high-grade prostate cancer, an aggressive type of prostate cancer that grows and spreads more quickly than low-grade cancers.

The warning comes after Health Canada reviewed two large international clinical trials that, ironically, were designed to provide evidence to support using finasteride and dutasteride to prevent prostate cancer.

Health Canada advised doctors and the public Monday that high-grade prostate cancer is rare, "and the increased risk seen with finasteride and dutasteride drugs is still considered very

Philippine experts eyes sponges, snails to produce new drugs

MANILA, 20 March—Philippines researchers are studying marine microorganisms in sponges that may lead to the production of new drugs for tuberculosis, pneumonia and other infectious diseases, and snails that could provide anti-pain agents, according to the Philippine Department of Science and Technology (DOST).

Researchers from the Marine Science Institute (MSI), University of Philippines have isolated microorganisms associated with sponges and are currently confirming their anti-infective properties or ability to combat infections. The team was led by Gisela Concepcion, UP's Vice President for Academic Affairs.

This is part of the programme called Pharmaseas Marine Drug Development Programme which was funded by Department of Science and Technology—Philippine Council for Marine and Aquatic Resources Research and Development (PCMARRD).

Another achievement of the Pharmaseas programme is the discovery of anti-pain drugs from the venom of turrid snails. Anti-pain drugs are important in the treatment of cancer and other debilitating illnesses.

Gisela said it will take some time to apply their research findings to the production of drugs.

NetZero to launch free wireless broadband service

INTERNET

NEW YORK, 20 March—It's like the '90s never left: Billy Crystal hosted the Oscars. Internet IPOs are back. And NetZero is returning with free Internet service—only this time it's wireless.

United Online Inc announced Monday that it will offer free wireless Internet service under its NetZero brand, the one that started the free dial-up phenomenon in 1998. The company is backing up the plan with TV, print and online advertisements.

There are plenty of catches with the free plan. United Online isn't offsetting its costs by making users look at advertising, as it did with its original offer of free dial-up Internet access. The "free" users will be money-losers for the company, United Online Chairman and CEO Mark Goldston said. That means United Online is using the free plan as a way to lure customers with the hope of upselling them to paying plans, which start at $9.95 per month.

To take advantage of the offer, consumers will need to buy a $50 antenna stick that plugs into a laptop, or a $100 "mobile hotspot" that allows any Wi-Fi equipped device to connect to the Internet. United Online will be selling the devices on the NetZero website. The free accounts are limited to 200 megabytes of data per month—enough for some email and Web surfing, but little else. Half an hour of full-screen streamed video will eat up the whole month's allotment. By comparison, AT&T Inc's cheapest wireless data plan costs $14.95 per month for slightly more data—250 megabytes per month—but that plan is only available for tablets with built-in cellular modems.—Internet

Wendy's takes No 2 spot from Burger King

NEW YORK, 20 March—Wendy's has dethroned Burger King as the country's second biggest hamburger chain.

Wendy's edged out Burger King in US sales volume for the first time last year since Wendy's was founded in 1969, according to a report by the food industry research firm Technomic Inc that's set to be released next month.

Wendy's had sales of $8.5 billion in 2011, compared with $8.4 billion for Burger King. McDonald's remained far larger than both with $34.2 billion in sales.

The figures are based on Technomic's estimates of system-wide sales at franchise and company-owned restaurants, rather than corporate revenue, which includes fees from franchise operators. Worldwide, Burger King still has far more restaurants than Wendy's and remains the second biggest hamburger chain behind McDonald's.

Both Burger King and Wendy's have struggled in recent years to keep up with the growth of McDonald's, which has managed to keep prices low through the recession, while also introducing a new menu items and remodeling restaurants. Sales are up 26 percent in the past five years at McDonald's, up 9 percent at Wendy's and flat at Burger King, according to Technomic.

Burger King has been reevaluating its business since it was acquired by investment firm 3G Capital in 2010.

The privately held company that's based in Miami recently retired its mascot "The King" last year and launched a new advertising campaign focused more on food.

Snowmelt floods hundreds of households in Xinjiang

URUMQI, 20 March—Recent snowmelt and heavy rains have flooded 578 houses and led to the evacuation of 300 people in northwest China's Xinjiang Uygur autonomous region, local authorities said Monday.

A total of 335 people from three counties in the Kazak autonomous prefecture of Ili have been relocated since the flooding occurred on 17 March, said officials with the prefecture committee of the Communist Party of China.

No human casualties have been reported so far. However, the flooding had killed 687 heads of livestock and submerged 8,070 mu (538 hectares) of farmland as of 7 pm on Sunday, officials said.

An emergency response

Dusty weather to shroud northwest China

BEIJING, 20 March—A cold front will bring dusty and windy weather to most regions in northwestern China over the coming three days, according to the forecast issued by the national observatory on Tuesday.

The cold front will also cause temperature drops of 6 to 8 degrees Celsius in some parts of Xinjiang Uygur autonomous region, Gansu Province, Qinghai Province and Inner Mongolia autonomous region during the period, the National Meteorological Centre said.

Temperatures in some of these regions will fall by 10 to 12 degrees Celsius, while some areas will experience sandstorms or snow, the observatory said.

Meanwhile, southern parts of China are set to experience light or moderate rains in the upcoming few days. Six hikers swept away by avalanche in Norway

OSLO, 20 March—Six hikers, possibly French, were swept away by an avalanche in northern Norway on Monday, a local police chief told AFP.

"Around 2:30 pm (1330 GMT), we were informed that an expedition of 12 people had been taken by an avalanche. According to initial, unconfirmed information, six of them were carried away by the avalanche and they could be French," Tromsø police chief Tor-Einar Eilertsen said. "We have scrambled significant resources to try to find them," he added.

Rescue workers and several helicopters were rushed to the avalanche site, which according to local media was on the Sorbmegaisa mountain in the Kaafjord municipality.

According to Eilertsen, the expedition team was equipped with radio transmitters which could aid the search.

Avalanches are common in Norway at this time of year as blocks of snow and ice begin crumbling under the first rays of spring sun.—Internet

Mini-tornado rips through Australian city

SYDNEY, 20 March—A mini-tornado tore through the northeastern Australian city of Townsville on Tuesday, ripping roofs off houses and causing severe damage to the power system, emergency service officials said.

The Queensland State Emergency Service said it had received dozens of calls for help, with nine people needing treatment, mostly for cuts and abrasions. "Early this morning a mini-tornado tore through the suburb of Vincent resulting in 25 to 30 houses being damaged. Some have lost their roofs," a spokeswoman told AFP.

Meteorologists, who said the freak storm could not officially be called a tornado as there was no funnel, recorded winds of up to 111 kilometres per hour, leaving thousands of homes without power. One resident told Sky

News that when the storm hit it sounded like "a jet taking off". Another said it was like "being in a washing machine".

Queensland Premier Anna Bligh, who faces being thrown out of office in state elections this weekend, said it was a frightening experience for the people affected. "It appears to be something akin to a mini-tornado. It has taken roofs off houses and there's a lot of vegetation down and that's caused enormous damage," she said.

She added the suburbs of Vincent, Pimlico and Gulliver had been affected, with heavy rain continuing to fall into the exposed interiors of roofless homes.

"These are very heavily populated areas of Townsville so there's no doubt that a lot of people have had a very scary experience this morning."

The town was officially declared a disaster area, which allows victims access to cash grants for rebuilding and other support and provides for the defence force to be called in to help if needed.

India to start work on stalled nuclear plant

Tamil Nadu's chief minister Jayalalithaa. INTERNET

NEW DELHI, 20 March—The southern Indian State of Tamil Nadu on Monday gave the green light for work to start on a massive nuclear power station stalled for months amid protests over safety concerns, a report said.

Tamil Nadu's chief minister announced the decision to begin work on two 1000-megawatt nuclear reactors in Koodankulam with Russian help following an approval by the state cabinet, the Press Trust of India (PTI) said.

"In accordance with the cabinet decision, immediate steps will be taken (to start the commissioning) of the plant," PTI quoted Chief Minister Jayalalithaa, who uses only one name, as saying in a statement.

Work on the project was stalled last September following mass protests by villagers and activists over safety concerns. Jayalalithaa urged political parties and protesters not to disrupt the project, which will tackle the state's severe power shortages.

Russian Ambassador to India Alexander Kadakin last month voiced his country's frustration over the delays.

"We cannot allow our scientists to remain idle endlessly. For months together, they are without work," Kadakin said.

Other protests have also thrown into disarray plans to build a power plant in the western state of Maharashtra.

India last month froze the assets of three non-profit groups it alleged were diverting foreign aid funds to fuel the anti-nuclear protests.

Nuclear energy has been a priority for India since 2008 when then US president George W. Bush signed into law a deal with New Delhi that ended a three-decade ban on US nuclear trade with the country.

Since then, France, Russia and private US and Japanese firms have been locked in fierce competition to sell new reactors to India.

WWII artillery shells found in NE China

HARBIN, 20 March—Four artillery shells discarded by Japanese troops around the time of World War II have been found in northeast China's Heilongjiang Province, local police said Tuesday.

The shells, about 18 cm in length, were unearthed 2 meters underground at two construction sites on 7 and 8 March in Qiqihar city's Tiefeng district, said an officer with the district's police station. Following an investigation, experts confirmed the shells were left by Japanese troops, and they have relocated the shells to a safe site for final destruction.

Qiqihar was the headquarters of the Japanese Kwantung Army's No 516 and No 526 troops equipped with chemical weapons during World War II.

On 18 Sept, 1931, Japanese forces attacked the barracks of Chinese troops in northeast China's Shenyang, Liaoning Province, marking the beginning of the Japanese invasion and occupation that lasted 14 years.

After the Japanese army was defeated in 1945, they buried a large quantity of chemicals weapons, shells and bombs underground.—Xinhua

UAE to make camel milk ice-cream

ABU DHABI, 20 March — In a first of its kind, a leading producer of dairy products in the United Arab Emirates (UAE) is planning to introduce a new variety of ice cream created from camel milk.

The Al Ain Dairy said it will be the first such product made out of camel milk in the UAE, and also in flavours hitherto unavailable in conventional ice cream.

"We have spent a lot of time creating flavours that we feel are different and most importantly not available in the market," said Abdullah Saif Al Darmaki, chief executive officer of Al Ain Dairy. Camel milk, which is slightly saltier than cow's milk, is an integral part of the traditional Arabian diet.

The milk has numerous health benefits that are often reported in scientific and health researches.

Al Darmaki said the technology for making camel milk ice cream was exactly the same as that made from cow's milk.

"But we wanted to do something completely different, which is why we have invested in new technology to produce a range of camel milk ice creams in niche flavours," he said.

The ice cream will be produced with pure camel milk, with no additives.

Four flavours have been created for the ice cream and Al Darmaki hoped they will attract people. He said both UAE citizens and expatriates enjoy ice cream in four flavours — dates, saffron, caramel and chocolate. —Internet

California girl, 8, killed by falling tree

ARNOLD, 20 March — A towering pine tree fell following northern California's weekend snowstorm, landing on a house and killing an 8-year-old girl inside, authorities said. Hailey Verzani's body was found in her bedroom in her family's Arnold residence about 6:30 am Sunday, pinned between the 100-foot-tall tree and her bed, KTXL-TV, Sacramento, reported.

"The whole house is torn up. It's awful," said a cousin, Kim Christopher. Ebbetts Pass District Fire Chief Dave Baugher said firefighters had to use rescue equipment to secure the tree before being able to remove the child's body.

The third-grader's mother, Lindsey Jacoby, and her mother's boyfriend escaped without serious injuries.

Relatives said they had noticed the big tree was leaning and could fall, but since it was on a neighbour's property they didn't know what to do about it. "We just didn't know it was going to fall on her like that," Christopher said.

Billows of Smoke

Every change is inevitable. So too was communism in Eastern Europe. And the wave of economic reform throughout the region followed opening up new markets. One was for tobacco giants like Philip Morris and R.J. Reynolds and Britain's B.A.T. Industries. One industry chairman said, "This is one of the most exciting times that I have seen in the tobacco business for the last 40 years", and he wasn't exaggerating. If you had ever ducked into a café in Warsaw, Prague, Budapest or Moscow, you would find the place always smoke-clogged. More than 160 million smokers light up 700 billion cigarettes annually. Nowhere is larger than this tobacco trade outside of China.

The biggest prize was the former Soviet Union. In July 1992, R.J. Reynolds became the first foreign tobacco company to manufacture in Russia. Competition was stiff. In the following September, Philip Morris made an agreement with local authorities to construct its own 100 million factory in St. Petersburg to produce 10 billion cigarettes a year.

Some health officials worry that the sophisticated Western-inspired advertising would push more people to take up the habit. In fact, they should have. Hungarian and Czechoslovakian males have the two highest reported death rates from cancer among 48 countries. Smoking related diseases are blamed for short life spans throughout the old Soviet bloc.

Tobacco's free ride will not last. The anti-smoking movement is starting to find its feet. The Polish city of Krakow took the first step. A controversial Law passed in 1992 prohibited smoking in public places such as schools, stadiums, hospitals and municipal buildings the first person to be caught was the Chief of the municipal police, who was fined for puffing in his office.

Such a case was found in our school several years ago. Our Headmistress, Daw Thein, was very strict. She ordered the school must be tobacco-free. When one teacher saw the Headmistress's son smoking a cigarette, she reported it to Daw Thein. The Grade 10- student was beaten severely at the assembly.

"National discipline starts at the school", my Headmistress told me.

South African police to communicate better with public

PRETORIA, 20 March—Police in South Africa will take steps to improve communication with the public to ensure communities are updated on the work they are doing, state-run news agency BuaNews reported.

This was agreed to at a meeting between Police Minister Nathi Mthethwa and acting National Police Commissioner Lieutenant-General Nhlanhla Mkhwanazi.

According to the ministry, when a member of the public reports a case, some police officers take down statements but do not give updates on investigations to complainants, particularly in areas where progress has been made such as arrests or sentencing of a criminal. Such lack of communication leads to the impression that police are not effective, the ministry said. "To correct this, communication and interactions are going to be improved at police station level because that is where investigators interface directly with the public," it said.

This will be done as part of an ongoing training of police officers, particularly through community forums as well as directly with crime victims.

The officials also agreed that monitoring of police stations needed to be reviewed to allow communities to get involved in the process. "Police station commanders must attend community policing forums regularly and must be known within the communities which they are policing," the ministry said. The meeting also reflected on the need for police to work towards more convictions.

"Policing in South Africa must now be taken to a higher level, we need to move beyond arrests. What will build confidence in the justice system is when police secure more convictions. To secure convictions, we would need better-trained investigators who present watertight cases in courts," the minister said.

KUNMING, 20 March—Six people have been confirmed dead and nine others injured in a building collapse in southwest China's Yunnan Province on Monday, local authorities said on Tuesday.

US man buried under mound of pinto beans dies

A 56-year-old man was killed when he was buried under a 20-foot (six-metre) mound of pinto beans at a warehouse in eastern Colorado where he worked, police said.

Raymond Segura Jr was pronounced dead at the Brush, Colorado, facility of the Kelley Bean Company after efforts to reach him alive were unsuccessful, Morgan County Undersheriff Dave Martin said.

"We moved several tons of beans to get to him," Martin said in a telephone interview.

Martin said emergency personnel were summoned to the site at 11:30 am on reports of a worker trapped in a pile of loose pinto beans.

Martin said dozens of rescue workers and even four inmates from the county jail spent an hour digging through a mound of the legumes to get to the trapped worker, but he was dead when crews reached him.

Segura had worked at the warehouse for between 12 and 15 years, Martin said. The cause of the accident, how the victim became trapped and the exact cause of death are under investigation.

Man takes tutu pics for breast cancer

A New York photographer said his wife's bout with breast cancer inspired him to pose in a tutu in locations including Italy and New York's Times Square.

Bob Carey said he first took a picture of himself wearing a tutu as a joke when he finished a ballet-related project in 2003 and the joke became a full-blown project later in the year when his wife, Linda, was diagnosed with breast cancer. The New York Daily News reported on Monday, "Bob is not like a lot of men," Linda said. "He's not afraid to put himself in a vulnerable spot."

Carey, who said the project helped him "cope" with Linda's illness, said he has since posed wearing nothing but the tutu and a pair of pink shorts in locations including Atlantic City, NJ, a Delaware ferry, New York's Times Square and Italy.

Carey said he is hoping his Web site, thetutuproject.com, will gather enough donations to collect the photographs into a book. He said the book would raise funds for breast cancer research.

"My wife really wants to inspire other women," he said. "She's been doing this for eight and a half years now. She's really a miracle."

Bob Carey is hoping to raise funds for breast cancer research through his photos which can be purchased through his website, thetutuproject.com.

Venus Williams relaunching fashion line, planning Grand-Slam themed ranges

WASHINGTON, 20 March—Venus Williams is relaunching her EleVen by Venus Williams clothing line designed for on and off court, with a range inspired by the French Open, Wimbledon, Summer Olympics and US Open.

The tennis star originally launched EleVen for US store Steve & Barry's, although the chain went into liquidation in 2008.

She has since partnered with brands including Ralph Lauren and Gilt Group, and the relaunch of EleVen is set to feature items such as a tournament dress, classic flutter skirt and tank tops for women and polos and V-necks for men.

Distribution will be aimed at specialty and department stores. The sportswoman will bring her personality to the range, with some styles having messages handwritten from Williams such as "Bring It," and "Oh & Oh, Beat 'Em".

Venus's sister Serena has a long-term sponsorship deal with Nike, and earlier this year collaborated with the sports giant on a capsule collection in honor of the 36th anniversary of Black History Month.

Venus hopes to see other tennis players wearing the range on court though. "That would be amazing.

That's definitely our goal going forward. Our next step is to show other players wearing it," she told WWD.

Oswaldo boosts Roma Champions League hopes

ROME, 20 March—Roma gave their outside hopes of a top-three finish in Serie A a shot in the arm on Monday night with a 1-0 win against Genoa thanks to an early strike from Pablo Daniel Oswaldo.

The Argentine — returning to the side after a two-match ban — scored what proved to be the only goal of the game in the third minute to take Roma clear in sixth place with 44 points.

Luis Enrique's side are now four points behind city rivals Lazio, who lie third, and three adrift of both Napoli and Udinese. Genoa, meanwhile, are 14th with 33 points, seven clear of the relegation zone, after what was their seventh match without a win. Romagot off to the perfect start as they sought to build on last weekend's victory at Palermo, with Oswaldo turning away from Marco Rossi and firing past Sebastien Frey into the far corner of the net for his ninth goal of the season. They dominated the game after that, but were unable to add to their lead, with substitute Bojan Krkic in particular guilty of a glaring miss late on.

But Genoa squandered the two outstanding chances that came their way, Fernando Belluschi being denied by Maarten Stekelenburg from close range in the first half and Rodrigo Palacio hitting the bar from just six yards out after the break. The Giallorossi now travel to face Serie A leaders AC Milan on Sunday.

TOKYO, 20 March—Japan's 20-year-old golf sensation Ryo Ishikawa has accepted special temporary membership on the US PGA Tour for the remainder of the 2012 season, the tour announced on Monday.

Ishikawa's runner-up showing at the Puerto Rico Open on 11 March gave him $582,471 in only six PGA starts, boosting him beyond the $411,943 he needed to qualify for an exemption to join the series for the rest of the year. The move gives Ishikawa unlimited sponsor exemptions for 2012. Previously, as a non-tour member, he was limited to a maximum of seven sponsor exemptions and 12 PGA events.

While Ishikawa will not earn points toward the season-ending US PGA playoffs as a special member, he will have the chance to earn full membership for 2013 if his prize money total is among the top 125 players for the full 2012 season. Ishikawa, who missed the cut at last weekend's Transitions Championship, will play in this week's Arnold Palmer Invitational at Bay Hill after earning eligibility by being among the top 50 in world rankings as of last week.

Tiger looks solid in return at Tavistock Cup

ORLANDO, 20 March—Tiger Woods made his return from a left Achilles tendon injury at the $2.15 million Tavistock Cup on Monday, joining Justin Rose in a nine-under par 63 four-ball pairing for Team Albany.

Showing no apparent limp, Woods opened with back-to-back birdies, added two more before the turn, hit an approach at 10 to five feet before Rose birdied and pitched from a bunker within inches from the cup for a birdie at 11. Woods and England's Rose combined for 10 birdies with a lone bogey at the par-4 16th in the better-ball format of the exhibition event, which matches six-man teams of PGA players from Isleworth, Albany, Lake Nona and Queenwood.—Internet

Barca 'seal Neymar move for 2014'

BARCELONA, 20 March—Barcelona have sealed a deal which would see talented young Brazilian striker Neymar join the Spanish club in 2014, Cadena SER radio reported.

The report claimed the Catalan giants have already paid 14.5 million euros ($19 million) of the total 58-million-euro transfer fee to the 20-year-old's Brazilian club Santos.

"According to several reliable sources Barca have already paid a quarter of the 58 million euros to Santos to guarantee the transfer of the player," Cadena SER claimed, adding that the date for his transfer was after the World Cup in Brazil in 2014.

Neymar takes a tumble during Sunday's match between Santos and Sao Paulo at Morumbi stadium.

The report added that the decision to seal the deal was taken by the player and his father against the wishes of his agent Wagner Ribeiro.

Neymar is considered the future star of Brazilian football and has been targeted by several European clubs, including Barcelona's rivals Real Madrid.

Tevez in frame for City, Chelsea without Terry

LONDON, 20 March—Carlos Tevez could make his return for Manchester City as they aim to revive their Premier League title hopes on Wednesday at home to a resurgent Chelsea, who will be without captain John Terry.

The 28-year-old Tevez is back in training after patching up his differences with the club and manager Roberto Mancini said the Argentine striker could be involved as a substitute.

Mancini's side have seen Manchester United open up a four-point lead at the top of the table and Tevez's availability would be a boost to their dream of winning the English title for the first time since 1968.

"There is a possibility (of a place on the bench)," Mancini told reporters on Tuesday. "He is getting better but I don't think Carlo can have more than 25-30 minutes.

"A player like Carlo needs to play but for 90 minutes it is impossible. But if he can play 30 minutes, after 45, then in three or four games he could have 90 minutes easily.

"Tomorrow we will decide. We want to know the situation with the players."

Barcelona out to close gap on leaders Madrid

BARCELONA, 20 March—Barcelona take on Granada at the Camp Nou on Tuesday, knowing a win will take them to within five points of Real Madrid and pile the pressure on the leaders before they go to Villarreal on Wednesday.

Barcelona's players celebrate during the Spanish league football match Sevilla FC vs FC Barcelona on 17 March, at the Ramon Sanchez Pizjuan stadium in Sevilla.

A last-minute Santi Cazorla free-kick allowed Malaga to come away from the Santiago Bernabeu with a point on Sunday and saw Madrid's seemingly unassailable lead over Barcelona at the top of La Liga trimmed to eight points.

Suddenly, there is a glimmer of hope for the reigning champions, despite Barcelona coach Pep Guardiola pouring cold water on suggestions that his side could still win the title after their 2-0 victory away to Sevilla on Saturday.

"We will not rest any of our players and there has not been a game we have not gone out to win," he said. "But forget the title, we will not win it," he added. Yet, there are 11 games still to play, including a "clasico" at the Camp Nou towards the end of April — and Guardiola's players are not giving up just yet. "Guardiola is entitled to his own opinion, he always talks with sense but we'll continue to compete, you have to ask him why he continues to say what he says," Dani Alves said, even before Madrid's slip-up against Malaga.—Internet

Froch: Give Bute respect

NOTTINGHAM, 19 March—Carl Froch has paid tribute to Lucian Bute for putting his IBF super-middleweight title on the line in Froch's home town of Nottingham.

"He's not often fought out of his hometown so to put his title on the line in my backyard he's either very confident or very stupid."

Froch will once again enter the ring against elite level competition on May 26 following his successful stint in the World Super Six Series over the past few years.

The 'Cobra' lost the Super Six final against Andre Ward but the former WBC champion gets another chance to win a portion of the world title against the unbeaten Bute, a Romanian-born Canadian who rarely fights outside of Quebec.

"It's great to be back in Nottingham - it's been too long," said Froch. "I am so pumped up for the fight and I've got to give Lucian Bute credit.

"I've given him stick in the past for not fighting the top opposition, he didn't enter the Super Six but he beat who was put in front of him.

"He's not often fought out of his hometown so to put his title on the line in my backyard he's either very confident or very stupid - I think he's very confident and he's the champion, so why not be confident.

"I'm coming into the fight on the back of a loss, and when I did that after the Kessler defeat I was so tuned in to beating Arthur Abraham and it was a whitewash - and that's how I feel about this fight.

"I've got a lot of respect for Lucian - he is a top level athlete and so am I, there's no needle between us and there doesn't need to be, as the fight speaks for itself."
