Help civil servants say no to bribery

The country is now marching towards a better future with the steady transformation of economic, political and social sectors. And necessary amendments to the relevant laws and regulations are being made, and economic and investment policies and investment laws are under review to be compatible with other countries.

At a time when direct foreign investments are being invited, it is necessary for all the civil servants to help the country prove its integrity to the international community.

Looking at from the point of view of the country going through a transition, it seems inevitable that we still have to cope with the issue of corruption, which is one of the major setbacks to the democratization process, although the new administration does not tolerate the dishonest behaviour.

It's no exaggeration to say that the people have long been fed up with corruption and bribery cases, all of which wreck the competitiveness of businesses and industries at the expense of the country's interest.

Corruption not only adds unnecessary costs at the expense of consumers but also instills the negative mentality, especially among the youth, that corruption is acceptable. Even in the light of recent corruption scandals, it seems some departmental officials still cannot refuse a bribe.

The country will never be reformed unless the corruption issue is seriously tackled and those found guilty are properly held responsible for their actions. The country would not face serious financial problem if there is no corruption and irregularities deeply entrenched in some government departments.

It is imperative that the new administration proves the validity of every case that is brought to public attention. If an investigation pinpoints any culprit, he or she must be punished as an example. In this context, the need for a review of the judicial system becomes apparent. We can no longer allow corrupt civil servants to get away with their selfish actions.

NATO to hand combat role to Afghans as it seeks way out of war

CHICAGO, 21 May—NATO will hand over the lead role in combat operations to Afghan forces across the country by mid-2013, alliance leaders said on Sunday as they charted a path out of a war that has lost public support and strained budgets in Western nations.

A NATO summit in Chicago on Monday will formally endorse a US-backed strategy for a gradual exit from Afghanistan, a move aimed at holding together an allied force scrambling to cope with France's decision to withdraw its troops early.

President Barack Obama and NATO partners want to show their war-weary voters the end is in sight in a conflict that has dragged on for more than a decade while at the same time trying to reassure Afghans that they will not be abandoned.

"There will be no rush for the exits," NATO Secretary-General Anders Fogh Rasmussen said as the summit got under way. He sought to put up a show of unity even as France's new President Francois Hollande vowed to stick by his pledge to withdraw French troops by year's end, two years earlier than the alliance timetable.

NATO's plan is to shift full responsibility to Afghan forces for security across the country by the middle of next year and then withdraw most of the alliance's 130,000 combat troops by the end of 2014, Rasmussen said.

While foreign forces will continue to fight the Taliban and other militants as necessary—and it may be very necessary—the new mission for US and NATO troops will assume a new focus on advising and supporting Afghan soldiers.—Reuters

Putin to dominate new Russian government

MOSCOW, 21 May—Russian President Vladimir Putin will unveil a government dominated by loyalists on Monday, leaving Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev limited scope to pursue his reform agenda and entrenching the Kremlin's grip over the economy's commanding heights.

Medvedev, 46, named premier after Putin returned to the Kremlin on 7 May, has pledged to launch pro-growth policies and a privatisation drive to wean Russia's $1.7 billion economy off its dependence on oil. But, even though the partners in Russia's ruling "tandem" announced they would switch jobs as long ago as last September, the lengthy and secretive process of forming a government has raised concerns that it will be driven by factional conflict.

Medvedev, speaking at a Group of Eight summit at the weekend where leaders discussed how to contain the euro zone's debt crisis, rebutted the skeptics.

"The government will be substantially renewed—that's why forming it has taken longer than in the past," he said at Camp David, US President Barack Obama's retreat outside Washington. "We have a plan of action ... that was tested in the first phase of the crisis," Medvedev told reporters. "If needed, we can put it into effect—in that sense all our guns are loaded."—Reuters

Greek leftist brings message to Europe: "Let's talk"

ATHENS, 21 May—The charismatic Greek leftist who could determine the fate of the euro begins a tour of European capitals on Monday carrying a single message: it's time to talk.

In an interview on the eve of his first visit abroad since his surprise rise in a 6 May election, Alexis Tsipras veered occasionally into the combative rhetoric that has seduced disaffected Greek youth and alarmed Brussels and Berlin.

But he also stressed repeatedly that he wants negotiations to keep Greece in the euro. He said he was looking to forge ties with likeminded European figures, including new French President Francois Hollande, who want to soften austerity policies by finding new ways to encourage growth.

"The first reason we are taking this trip is because we want the governments of these important European Union countries, France and Germany, to see what we stand for: what is being transmitted in Europe about us is not what we represent and want," Tsipras told Reuters at the office of his SYRIZA party.

He will not be meeting government officials, but will see fellow leftists in France and Germany, including former French presidential candidate Jean-Luc Melancon and Klaus Ernst and Gregor Gysi of Germany's The Left. He will hold news conferences in both capitals to get his message to a wider audience.

"We are not at all an anti-European force. We are fighting to save social cohesion in Europe. We are maybe the most pro-European force in Europe, because its dominant powers will lead the union into instability and the euro zone to collapse if they insist on austerity," he said.

While he repeated his assertion that the terms of a 130 billion bailout agreement Greece signed with international lenders in March are now a "dead letter", he said that if he comes to power he will seek a new policy mix to keep Greece in the euro.

Fed by dry brush, wildfires persist in Southwest

PHOENIX, 21 May—An Arizona wildfire whipped up by winds and dry conditions threatened to trigger more evacuations on Sunday, just as firefighters were nearly done battling the biggest of four blazes in the state.

Fires in Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado have forced the evacuation of several small towns and torched more than 65 square miles (168 square km) of forest, brush and grass in the US Southwest.

The Arizona blazes were the first major wildfires in the state this year after a record 2011 fire season in which nearly 2,000 fires consumed more than 1,500 square miles (3,900 square km), according to the National Interagency Fire Centre.

The so-called Gladiator Fire was the greatest concern for firefighters on Sunday. After getting a respite from winds on Saturday, they faced a combination of dry vegetation and higher winds on Sunday and the days ahead.

"We're expecting more extreme fire behavior today. The fuel is dry and conditions are dangerous," said Michelle Fidler, a spokeswoman for the departments fighting the fire.

More evacuations were possible, she said. The Gladiator fire, named after an old mine in the area, destroyed four structures and forced about 350 residents of the old mining town of Crown King to leave their homes earlier in the week. It also prompted the evacuation of three tiny and remote Arizona communities on Friday.

In a separate incident, a roadside bomb went off near a police vehicle in the same district, injuring two policemen, the source said.

Salahudin Province is a Sunni-dominated province. Its capital City of Tikrit, some 170 km north of Baghdad, is the hometown of the former President Saddam Hussein.

Near Baghdad, a civilian was killed and three others wounded when a roadside bomb ripped through Tarmiyah area, some 30 km north of the Iraqi Capital, a local police anonymously told Xinhua.

Sporadic attacks are still common in the Iraqi cities despite the dramatic decrease in violence since its peak in 2006 and 2007 when the country was engulfed in sectarian killings.

NASA chooses rocket for Orion launches

CAPE CANAVERAL, 21 May—NASA says it will modify an existing and proven Delta IV rocket second stage to launch an Orion spacecraft on an unmanned test flight in 2017.

A manned flight to lunar orbit is planned for four years after that, the agency said.

The Boeing upper stage is “the only means available to support the immediate in-space propulsion needs” for the excursions, NASA said in a statement.

An internal study of in-space propulsion systems available in the United States, Europe and Japan determined the Delta IV upper stage “is the only known in-space stage requiring relatively minor modifications” to meet mission requirements as well as the launch schedule, NASA said.

The Delta IV second stage is powered by a single Pratt & Whitney RL-10B2 engine fueled by liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen.

Both Orion missions will be launched from complex 39B at Kennedy Space Centre on early versions of NASA’s new heavy-lift Space Launch

Undersea turbine powers Scottish island

EDAY, (Scotland), 21 May—An undersea turbine using tidal power to generate electricity performed successfully in initial tests off the coast of Scotland, a private energy company said.

The 100-foot-high, 1-megawatt turbine, lowered into position during winter storms off the Orkney Islands, is powering homes and businesses on the island of Eday, officials with Scottish Power Renewables said.

The test is part of a plan to create a 10-megawatt tidal power array in the Sound of Islay, they said.

The test, which began in December, is part of a larger project for the Islay project that intends to install more turbines “as early as feasible” between 2013 and 2015, the energy company said.

“The performance of the first HS1000 device has given us great confidence so far,” SPR Chief Executive Keith Anderson said in a company release on Thursday. “Engineers were able to install the device during atrocious weather conditions, and it has been operating to a very high standard ever since.”

abandoning obsolete technology and embracing technology that is faster, better, cheaper and more convenient,” he said. “But the risk is that we may be creating a digital divide — not necessarily a divide between the rich and poor, but between the information rich and information poor.”

Rural customers could replace land line telephones with cellular phones, for example, but most cell phone companies charge a fee for each minute of use — metering — while most fees for land lines are unmetered and are paid through a fixed monthly charge, he said.

Frieden said there are doubts cellular service will prove to be as dependable as landlines.

“Cell phone companies have these colourful maps that show how well they cover areas,” Frieden said. “But there are lots of places — including places in rural Pennsylvania, West Virginia and New York — that do not have cell phone service, or offer limited services not suitable for broadband, Internet access.”

“There are other forms of competition now,” Frieden acknowledges, “but these alternatives are not fair or adequate everywhere.”

UNIVERSITY PARK, 21 May—As communication companies merge telephone, television and Internet services, some customers may be left on the wrong side of the digital divide, a US researcher says.

Telephone companies are asking government regulators to free them of their traditional role as a public utility, citing the availability phones and fiber optic cable that make copper-based telephone land lines obsolete.

However, not all these alternatives are as affordable and as ubiquitous as copper landlines, a problem that could leave many rural residents underserved, Penn State telecommunication researcher Rob Frieden says.

Whales can ‘turn down’ their hearing

HONOLULU, 21 May—Whales can “adjust” their super-sensitive hearing, used to hunt and navigate, and can turn it down when they anticipate loud noises, US researchers say.

Scientists at the University of Hawaii conducted a study using a trained false killer whale, or marine dolphin, named Kina.

Paul Nachtigall and a colleague, Alexander Supin from the Russian Academy of Sciences, said they suspected Kina might have the ability “to control the level of her hearing.”

They placed sensors contained within soft latex suction cups on Kina’s body to measure the electrical activity in Kina’s brain as it responded to sound as she hunted.

The researchers monitored the whale’s brain while they played a “neutral tone,” an innocuous beep, then followed that with a 5-second pulse of 170 decibels, equivalent to the loudness of a rifle shot.

Over time, they said, Kina learned this neutral tone was a warning signal and turned down her hearing sensitivity when she heard it, so the sensors recorded a smaller signal from the subsequent loud noises.

Marine mammals such as dolphins, sperm whales and killer whales that use echolocation for hunting may have evolved this rapidly adjustable hearing to protect themselves from their own clicks and buzzes, Nachtigall said.

“They sounds they produce are very loud — they can be over 230-decibel pulses, and then must listen immediately for very quiet echoes,” he told the BBC.

“Her whole head is an ear. There are many paths for sound to travel up to her actual ears,” he said.—Internet

System can help the blind navigate indoors

RENO, 21 May—A low-cost indoor navigation system for the blind based on human-computer interaction can run on a standard smartphone, US engineers say.

Computer science engineering researchers at the University of Nevada, Reno, presented their accessible navigation system called Navatar at two national conferences in the last two weeks, the university reported in a release on Friday.

The system uses digital 2-D architectural maps that are already available for many buildings and uses low-cost sensors such as accelerometers and compasses available in most smartphones to allow users with visual impairments to navigate indoor environments.

“Existing indoor navigation systems typically require the use of expensive and heavy sensors, or equipping rooms and hallways with radio-frequency tags that can be detected by a handheld reader and which are used to determine the user’s location,” Kostas Bekris of the university’s Robotics Research Lab said.

“This has often made the implementation of such systems prohibitively expensive, with few systems having been deployed.”

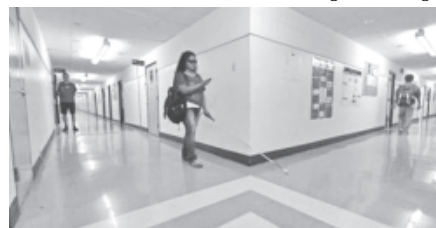

Navatar locates and tracks the user inside the building, finds the most suitable path based on the user’s special needs and gives step-by-step instructions to the destination, Bekris said.

“Nevertheless, the smartphone’s sensors, which are used to calculate how many steps the user has executed and her orientation, tend to pick up false signals,” researcher Eelke Folmer said.

“To synchronize the location, our system combines probabilistic algorithms and the natural capabilities of people with visual impairments to detect landmarks in their environment through touch, such as corridor intersections, doors, stairs and elevators.

“This is a very cool mix of disciplines, using the user as a sensor combined with sophisticated localization algorithms from the field of robotics,” Folmer said.

Earth’s carbon sinks keeping up with CO2

BOULDER, 21 May—Earth’s ecosystems are still capable of soaking up more carbon as greenhouse gases accumulate in the atmosphere, a US study finds.

Researchers with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration say the research contradicts several recent studies that suggested the world’s natural “carbon sinks” have reached or passed their capacity, and in fact total capacity has increased roughly in line with rising emissions, ScienceNews.org reported.

“The sinks have been more than able to keep up with emissions,” Pieter Tans, an atmospheric scientist at NOAA’s Earth System Research Laboratory in Boulder, Colo., said. Measurements of the greenhouse gas carbon dioxide show levels are rising steadily, from 316 parts per million in 1959 to 392 parts per million today.

Forests can sequester carbon dioxide through photosynthesis, while oceans take it up proportionally as levels rise in the air, researchers said. Researchers monitored 42 marine sites where carbon dioxide levels have been measured for decades to analyze how much CO2 was in the atmosphere above each of these sites over time.

“Less carbon dioxide has remained in the atmosphere, relative to the amount of fossil fuel emissions, today compared to 50 years ago,” Tans said. Exactly how the sinks are keeping up is unclear, researchers said.

One possibility is that forests are regrowing in parts of the world more than scientists had thought, or the oceans may be taking up significantly more carbon than had been estimated, they said.—Internet

Health Tip: Tame your food cravings

Food cravings can pull you off course when you're trying to diet and eat in a healthful way.

The Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics offers these suggestions to help you curb food cravings:

- * Cravings often are short-lived. Try to wait at least 20 minutes before you act on a craving.
- * Opt for a healthier alternative to what you crave. Choose fat-free chips instead of potato chips, or bake an apple for a sweet treat.
- * Buy your favourite treats in single-serving sizes. For example, buy a single cookie, rather than a whole box.
- * Have regularly scheduled snack times and enjoy a healthy snack that you've already stocked.
- * Indulge in a social treat — rather than food — by calling a friend.
- * Keep a log of your cravings. Record what you were doing when you craved, how long you felt the craving and how you handled it.—Internet

Antibiotics prevent UTIs better than probiotics

NEW YORK, 21 May—Antibiotics are still better than probiotics at preventing urinary tract infections, but at least "good bacteria" don't add to a person's antibiotic resistance, a new study concludes. Recurring UTIs are common among some women and low-dose antibiotics are sometimes used to prevent them. The worry is that overuse of the drugs also reduces their effectiveness by making disease-causing bacteria like E coli resistant.

"This is an increasing worldwide problem, resulting into less and less treatment options for (severe) bacterial infections in all countries of the world," Dr Suzanne Geerlings, from the Academic Medical Centre at the University of Amsterdam in The Netherlands and one of the new study's authors, wrote in an email to Reuters Health.

Geerlings and her colleagues recruited 252 women between January 2005 and September 2007 for a trial to compare the use of antibiotics and probiotics to prevent UTIs.

The participants, who lived in communities surrounding the medical centre, were all postmenopausal — a time when vulnerability to UTIs increases because of hormonal changes, according to the researchers.

All the participants reported having had at least three UTIs in the year before the trial began, and the average number was seven.

The women were separated into two groups of about the same size. One group took a single dose of the antibiotic co-trimoxazole (Bactrim, Septra and others) every day for twelve months, while the other group took two capsules containing Lactobacillus rhamnosus GR-1 and Lactobacillus reuteri RC-14, both types of beneficial bacteria, daily.

All the participants also took placebo pills so the patients and the people dispensing the pills wouldn't know who received which treatment — to minimize any influence on the study's results. The researchers then tracked how many UTIs occurred in each group of women over a year. They also collected vaginal swabs and samples of the women's urine and feces every month to test for the presence of good bacteria and infection-causing bacteria like E coli.

In addition, women took a monthly survey asking about symptoms of UTIs, side effects, other infections and antibiotic use. Overall, the antibiotics were slightly better at keeping UTIs at bay. About 69 percent of the women in the group taking the antibiotic had one or more UTIs within the year. On average, the antibiotic group had 2.9 UTIs per woman.

As for the probiotic group, about 79 percent had a UTI within the year, with an average of 3.3 UTIs per woman.

The women taking the antibiotic also seemed to go twice as long without a UTI — six months, compared with three months among women taking the probiotics.

Based on the women's urine and feces samples, however, resistance to a range of antibiotics seemed to increase within the first month in the antibiotic group.

Before the study, about 20 percent to 40 percent of E. coli in samples from all the women's bodies were resistant to co-trimoxazole.

At the 12-month mark, between 80 percent and 95 percent of the bacteria were resistant in the women taking the antibiotic.

Rates of resistant E coli were slightly lower at 12 months in women taking the probiotics than when the study began.

Similar changes in antibiotic resistance were seen for a range of other antibiotics, including ciprofloxacin and gentamicin, among both groups of women — which the researchers speculate might be because the same mechanism in certain bacteria allows them to resist several different drugs.

The absence of increased resistance among women taking the probiotics means that "lactobacilli may be an acceptable alternative for prevention of UTIs, especially in women who dislike taking antibiotics," the researchers wrote in the Archives of Internal Medicine. The study, however, had several limitations.

Overseas companies target China's ageing population

BEIJING, 21 May—China, which has one of the world's largest elderly population, has attracted more and more overseas companies in selling products and services for the aged, China Daily reported. Martin Cook, chairman of a British company selling products for the elderly and disabled, said: "It (China) is a massive, massive market."

In the 1990s, Cook outsourced his manufacturing to China and imported the products into Europe. In April, he set up an office in Shanghai to sell products in China.

Cook said the most popular product his company sells in China was a plastic ramp system made in Denmark, which costs 300 yuan (USD 47).

Terada Daisuke, from a leading service provider in Japan, said his group will share "Japanese professional nursing skills" in China by providing services in design and operation of nursing homes. More than 185 million Chinese were 60 or older by the end of 2011, according to the ministry of civil affairs. Lu Ying, director of social welfare and charities under the ministry of civil affairs, said the government alone can never meet the needs of the rapidly ageing population.

"The increase in the elderly population has helped to create new business opportunities," Lu said. Lu estimated that old-age support services have a potential market value of more than 450 billion yuan (over USD 70 billion).—Internet

Fitness may reduce hypertension risk

COLUMBIA, 21 May—People who have a parent with high blood pressure can reduce their risk of hypertension with moderate exercise, US researchers say.

Lead author Robin P Shook, a doctoral candidate in the Arnold School of Public Health at the University of South Carolina in Columbia, said the study tracked a group of 6,278 predominantly Caucasian adults ages 20-80 for an average 4.7 years. Thirty-three percent of participants reported a parent had hypertension.

When the study began, all participants were healthy, did not have hypertension and achieved an exercise test score of at least 85 percent of their age-predicted maximal heart rate. During the study, 1,545 participants developed hypertension.

The study, published in the journal Hypertension, found high levels of fitness were associated with a 42 percent lower risk of developing hypertension, and moderate levels of fitness with a 26 percent lower risk.

People with both a low level of fitness and a parent with hypertension had a 70 percent higher risk for developing hypertension, compared with highly fit people with no parental history, Shook said.

"The results of this study send a very practical message, which is that even a very realistic, moderate amount of exercise — which we define as brisk walking for 150 minutes per week — can provide a huge health benefit, particularly to people predisposed to hypertension because of their family history," Shook said in a statement.

YANGON, 21 May— Together with the Director-General and officials concerned of the Hotels and Tourism Services, Myanmar Hoteliers Association Chairman U Yan Win and members, Union Minister for Hotels and Tourism U Tint Hsan yesterday noon held a meeting with the hoteliers of the licensed medium and small hotels existing at the centre of Yangon.

Afterwards, the Union Minister got to May Shan Hotel where he looked around the reception, bedrooms and restaurants. He went on to Garden Guest House at the corner of 32nd Street and Maha Bandoola Street, and Okinawa Guest House in the 32nd Street (Lower Block).

It was known that Myanmar Hotels and Tourism Services has been providing those interested especially national races and foreign investors in making investments in that field since it found that there should be enough hotels in Yangon, Mandalay, Bagan and Inlay for hotel accommodations to tourists.

It is Yangon where there are about 190 hotels, motels and inns, which can serve a total of 8000 bedrooms.

Besides, there are a total of 140 hotels with reasonable prices in downtown Yangon and its suburbs, which about 1500 bedrooms can be supplied.

At the meeting with the hoteliers of Yangon Hotel Zone at Panda Hotel in Lanmadaw Township, the Union Minister said that the country now sees about 1500 tourists daily. Among them, about 1000 get hotel services. It would be much better than before only if the hotels under three stars contribute to the needs though there are about 8000 hotel bedrooms in Yangon.

He then urged those to be all eyes for doing their work to keep the tourism industry increase in rate.—MNA

Alibaba buys back 20 percent stake held by Yahoo for $7.1 billion

SHANGHAI, 21 May—Chinese Internet entrepreneur Jack Ma is buying back up to half of a 40 percent stake in his Alibaba Group from Yahoo Inc for $7.1 billion, in a deal that moves the Chinese e-commerce leader closer to a public listing.

Under the agreement, Yahoo will sell half of its stake in Alibaba for at least $6.3 billion in cash and up to $800 million in new Alibaba preferred stock. The deal, announced in a joint statement on Monday, caps years of talks between the two firms over Alibaba reclaiming some or all of the 40 percent stake that Yahoo bought for about $1 billion in 2005.

A source familiar with the deal said Yahoo built in incentives for Alibaba, which operates the popular Chinese online marketplace Taobao, to hold an initial public offering by end-2015.

Yahoo, which has come under fire from shareholders for failing to take aggressive action to reverse a decline in advertising revenue in the face of competition from Google Inc and Facebook, will hand most of the sale proceeds to its stockholders.

"For Yahoo it's a decent compromise, they were never going to keep all the 40 percent stake and expect to see these guys IPO. I think they sold it off at a pretty reasonable valuation," said Michael Clendenin at RedTech Advisors in Shanghai. "Yahoo still has a lot of bigger problems ahead of them, I mean, they are a portal so they're going the way of the dodo bird."

"Credit to Jack Ma, he's a wheeler and dealer and he got a very good deal on this one," he added.

According to the statement, Alibaba would buy back half of Yahoo's remaining stake—a 10 percent holding—at the IPO price or allow Yahoo to sell those shares in the offering before end-2015. Alibaba Group is valued at $30-35 billion.

Government proposes exposing New Zealand airlines to foreign control

WELLINGTON, 21 May—The New Zealand government is proposing to scrap foreign ownership limits on New Zealand airlines, Transport Minister Gerry Brownlee announced on Monday.

However, Air New Zealand, the national carrier, would be exempt from the new rules, said Brownlee in a statement to launch a discussion document on New Zealand's international air transport policy.

Brownlee said the policy review proposed continuing to seek inter-government agreements with liberalized investment criteria, provided certain criteria were met.

The review proposed removing limits on foreign ownership of New Zealand airlines, which were currently set at 25 percent ownership by any one foreign airline, or 35 percent by foreign airlines in total.

"It is important to note that changes to the ownership of Air New Zealand are not being considered as part of this review," Brownlee said.

New Zealand control of Air New Zealand would "take precedence over any changes to general policy," said Brownlee, referring to the government's plan to sell down its shareholding in Air New Zealand to 51 percent.

The document also outlined immediate priorities for negotiating new air services agreements focusing on East Asia and South America.

Possible engine problem delays US rocket launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, 21 May—The launch of a privately owned Falcon 9 rocket from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station was delayed on Saturday when a computer detected a possible problem with one of the rocket's engines, a Space Exploration Technologies official said.

Preparations for the company's trial cargo run to the International Space Station proceeded smoothly until 4:55 am EDT (0855 GMT) when an onboard computer aborted the launch.

"Liftoff ... we've had a cutoff. Liftoff did not occur," said NASA launch commentator George Diller, caught off guard by the sudden, last-minute turn of events.

A computer monitoring the rocket's nine engines detected a climbing pressure reading in one engine's chambers and halted the launch 0.5 seconds before liftoff, SpaceX president Gwynne Shotwell told reporters.

"Just like a pilot at the end of a runway revs the engines and looks at the gauges. We were revving the engines, we were looking at the gauges and we decided not to fly," Shotwell said, adding that the problem was unlikely to be a sensor issue.

The company's next launch opportunity is at 3:44 am EDT (0744 GMT) on Tuesday.

It is trying to send the unmanned rocket, carrying a Dragon cargo capsule, to the International Space Station, and would be the first private company to do this.

Cambodia launches first ever life insurance

PHNOM PENH, 21 May—Cambodia launched the first ever life insurance here with the official inauguration of Cambodian Life Insurance Company (Cambodian Life) on Monday, seen as another landmark in the kingdom's financial market after the opening of stock market in mid-April.

Cambodian Life is a joint venture established on 10th January, 2012 by Cambodia's Ministry of Economy and Finance and four other partners, namely PT Asuransi from Indonesia, Asia Insurance from Hong Kong, Bangkok Life Assurance and Bangkok Insurance Public from Thailand. The Ministry holds 51 percent of stake in the joint venture.

Operating throughout the whole country, Cambodian Life is tasked to provide life insurance products in the form of private voluntary for Cambodian people's safety nets, which is a new mechanism going to supplement the country's social security system under the Labour Law. As a newly-born enterprise, only three types of insurances are found on the company's product list, so far, namely mortgage insurance, whole life insurance and term insurance.

According to the company's product introduction, the Mortgage Insurance has a coverage period of 2-20 years on the insured person's outstanding loan with a minimum amount of 1,500 US dollars; the Whole Life covers the insured up to 90 year old under the condition of natural death, accident death and death of disease; while the Term Insurance provides life coverage for a limited period of 3, 5 or 10 years under the condition of natural death, accident death and death of disease.—Xinhua

Successful negotiations had already been completed this year with Japan and China, and were currently underway with Brazil and French Polynesia.

"A broad range of aviation linkages are essential to New Zealand's economic and social well-being," Brownlee said.

"Over time, as new airlines enter the New Zealand market, this is likely to lead to more services and cheaper airfares."—Xinhua

Australia's Qantas to cut 500 jobs

SYDNEY, 21 May—Australia's largest airline Qantas Airways announced on Monday that it will cut 500 jobs following a review of its heavy aircraft maintenance and engineering operations in Australia.

The airline said it would consolidate heavy maintenance work into Brisbane and Queensland and Victoria's Avalon.

Qantas said the restructure was necessary as there was not enough heavy maintenance work required for three separate facilities and the introduction of new technology and modern aircraft would lead to a further 60 percent reduction in heavy maintenance requirements over the next seven years.

As a result of the restructure, heavy maintenance on Boeing 737 aircraft will move from its base at Tullamarine in Melbourne and be maintained in Brisbane along with B767 aircraft and Airbus A330s, the airline said. The base at Avalon will continue to maintain Boeing 747s.

"There will be a net reduction of 500 positions as a result of the restructure," Qantas said in a statement on Monday. The airline said 422 jobs would go from its Tullamarine and 113 positions would be axed at Avalon.

But 30 new line maintenance jobs will be created in Melbourne and five in Sydney, Qantas said. The airline said consolidating heavy maintenance and other engineering initiatives would save the company up to 100 million AU dollars (98.54 million US dollars) annually.—Xinhua TOKYO, 21 May—An annular solar eclipse was visible over a wide area of Japan on Monday morning, giving thrills to observers across the nation.

For the first time in 932 years, the rare astronomical event could be seen from a wide area of Japan including Tokyo, Nagoya and Osaka. It was seen from Kagoshima Prefecture in the southwest to Fukushima in northeastern Japan.

An annular eclipse occurs when the sun, moon, and Earth are exactly in line. Instead of obscuring the sun, the eclipse creates a bright ring, called an annular, around the moon's silhouette.

In Japan, the moon began sliding in front of the sun from around 6 am.

At Cape Muroto in western Japan, a partial eclipse began at around 6:15 am, and the "ring of fire" was formed about one hour later.

The point where the annular eclipse is visible moved from west to east in a quick succession, from Osaka to Nagoya to Tokyo and then Fukushima.

The eclipse was visible in more places than anticipated because the

In Shiojiri, Nagano Prefecture, central Japan, NHK cameras caught a high-definition image of Bailey's beads — a spectacle only visible during fleeting moments of the annular eclipse. The image shows beads of sunlight shining through rugged valleys on the edge of the moon.

Observation events were held on land, sea and in the air. Some elementary schools held viewing parties.

Astronomers say the next time an annular eclipse can be seen across such a wide area will be 300 years from now, in 2312.—NHK

Saudi police seize heroin

MEDINA, 21 May—The Saudi Highway Patrol in Medina seized 35 kilograms of heroin which were hidden in a truck spare tire, officials said.

Highway patrol officers pulled over a car on Friday after noticing suspicious behaviour and discovered the heroin while conducting a search of the vehicle, the Saudi Gazette reported.

Brig Gen Misfer al-Asadi, director of Highway Patrol Department, told al-

Medina newspaper that the heroin was discovered during a traffic stop.

"The driver was on his way to Medina to deliver the drugs when he was apprehended by highway patrol officers and referred to the Narcotics Department in Medina."

Guatemala volcano spits lava and ash

GUATEMALA CITY, 21 May—Guatemala's Fuego volcano belched burning lava and black ash into the sky early Saturday, leading the government to issue an airplane advisory and close sections of highway.

The volcano, about 25 miles (40 kilometres) southwest of the capital, erupted about 2:45 am (0745 GMT), spewing a column of ash up to 16,400 feet (5,000 metres) above the crater and launching burning red lava nearly 1,300 feet (400 metres) high.

The national emergency commission issued an advisory, warning planes not to fly within a 25-mile (40 kilometres) radius of the volcano. The La Aurora international airport in Guatemala City remained open.

The commission also closed two stretches of highway threatened by lava flows that reached the base of the mountain.

Guatemala's four active volcanoes have a history of causing shut downs. In 2010, an explosion at the Pacaya volcano about 25 miles (40 kilometres) south of Guatemala City coated the city in a thick layer of black ash and rock, forcing hundreds of families to evacuate and closing the international airport.

Horse rescued from Pacific Ocean

A horse that fled from a California beach photo shoot was rescued after swimming more than two miles out to sea.

Santa Barbara Harbor Patrol Officer Ryan Kelly said William, a 7-year-old Arabian horse, was spooked by the water in the evening and ran into the water from the Summerland beach, CNN reported.

Rescuers including the nearby Carpenteria Fire Department and Santa Barbara County's search and rescue team took to the water in search of the equine, which was located swimming toward oil rigs more than two miles offshore in the Santa Barbara Channel.

"Firefighters were able to hook the animal's reins with a boat hook and bring it alongside a paddleboat," the report said.

The horse was escorted back to dry land with rescue workers taking turns holding the animal's head up over the water.

The horse was released back to its owner after being examined at a local animal clinic, officials said.

Woman swallows toothbrush

Israeli doctors say they were able to safely remove a toothbrush from a woman's stomach after she accidentally swallowed it.

Bat-El Panker, 24, came home from work on 11 May, and went to brush her teeth. When she bent over the faucet with the toothbrush in her mouth, she said it slipped down her throat.

Panker told Ynetnews she tried to get it out, but to no avail. She rushed to the hospital and had an X-ray, but the doctors couldn't see the toothbrush, and sent her home. In pain the next day, Panker went to another hospital. She underwent more X-rays, and ultrasounds, but the toothbrush was still nowhere to be found.

Finally, when the doctors sent her to have a CT scan, there it was.

Dr Uri Segel, director of the hospital's gastrointestinal unit, managed to fish it out of her stomach using an endoscopic instrument, sparing Panker surgery.

Panker expressed her thanks to Dr Segel, and her anger with the first round of doctors who didn't believe her.

"We're just people who want a little help when we're hurting, and it's important that doctors listen," she said.

Montana man world's oldest clown

A Michigan couple said their family will no longer be eating fast food after the woman's 14-year-old son found a piece of a human finger in his Arby's sandwich.

Jamie Vail and Joe Wheaton said the woman's son, Ryan Hart, discovered the finger fragment when he bit into his Arby's junior roast beef sandwich at the Jackson restaurant and spit the object out to identify it as a piece of finger, the Jackson Citizen-Patriot reported.

Jackson Police and the Jackson County Health Department determined a worker had cut her finger on a meat slicer at the restaurant moments prior to the incident. Steve Hall, environmental health director for the Jackson County Health Department, said he believes other workers stepped in to the woman's station without being aware of what had taken place.

Vail said she has obtained a lawyer but has not yet decided on a course of action.

Wheaton said the long-term consequences of the incident are clear.

"We don't eat fast food no more," Wheaton said.

A former Montana rancher and carpenter has made it into the Guinness Book of World Records as the world's oldest clown.

Floyd Creekmore, who still performs as Creeky the Clown at the age of 95, told the Voice of America he got his training from clowns when the circus came through town.

"Barnum and Bailey Circus come through Great Falls and most of the kids would go up to the circus grounds and they could get little jobs and they'd work for a ticket to get into the circus," he said. "I went and found the clowns and I got a lot of pointers from the clowns."

Creekmore says he would have run off to join the circus if he had the opportunity. Instead, he worked as a ranch hand, ran his own ranch and became a carpenter.

When he retired in 1981, he joined Shriners International. The group, which helps sick children, runs its own circuses and Creekmore got a chance to tour the northwestern states.

Lippi relieved with fast start as Guangzhou coach

GUANGZHOU, 21 May— Celebrated Italian coach Marcello Lippi declared the future was bright for Guangzhou Evergrande after winning his first match in charge of the Chinese champions.

Guangzhou beat Qingdao Jonoon 1-0 on Sunday to go four points clear at the top of the Chinese Super League in Lippi's first match since being appointed on Thursday.

"I have been here for three days. But the team has played in a total of 17 matches in the past three months.

I found the team is a little bit tired," the 2006 World Cup-winning coach was quoted as saying by the Asian Football Confederation website (www.the-afc.com) on Monday.

The 64-year-old took over from South Korean Lee Jang-soo, who had led the big-spending club to the last 16 of the Asian Champions League.

"The players need some time to adjust its new position and condition," said Lippi, adding he was relieved to get a victory in his first game.

"In my career, with Juventus, (Inter) Milan or the Italian national team, my debut match has always been a loss. So I was a little bit afraid about the first match actually.

"Now I have the opposite result, I feel very happy and have more confidence for the future."

Napoli win first trophy since Maradona era

ROME, 21 May—Napoli won their first major title since the Diego Maradona era, denied Serie A champions Juventus the double and handed their captain Alessandro Del Piero an unhappy end to 19 seasons at the club by beating the Turin side 2-0 in the Italian Cup final on Sunday.

Edinson Cavani broke the deadlock with a penalty just after the hour and Marek Hamsik finished off a counter-attack as Napoli claimed their first trophy since the Maradona-inspired team won Serie A in 1989/90.

Juventus had substitute Fabio Quagliarella sent off in the 89th minute for a full-blooded elbow in the face of Salvatore Aronica after only 17 minutes on the pitch.

"This was a club that didn't exist, said Napoli president Aurelio De Laurentiis, a film-maker who refounded the club after it was declared bankrupt in 2004 and led it from Serie C back to the top flight.

"In a few years we've brought something home, above all the knowledge that Napoli exists, lives and can be the world champion of the sport." Napoli coach Walter Mazzarri said: "It seemed unthinkable to beat Juve.

"They hadn't ever lost this season (in Serie A) and to beat them 2-0 was magnificent work. The team has done something extraordinary in the last three years: Cavani, (Ezequiel) Lavezzi, Hamsik are on everyone's lips, but it's an entire team that should be acclaimed as one." "This was the 51st game of the season. Anyone who plays football knows that playing these games at that level is hard. We have paid in the championship for this. You can lose to anyone in our league, and we dropped too many points."

Kung, who eliminated World No 1 Yani Tseng in the third round, was denied her first LPGA victory since 2008.

In earlier semi-finals, 49th-ranked Kung defeated 37th-ranked US veteran Vicky Hurst 2 and 1 while 19th-rated Munoz ousted 15th-ranked American Morgan Pressel by the same margin to set up the final at Hamilton Farm Golf Pressel won the par-5 second and fifth holes with birdies while Munoz won the par-3 third with a birdie. Pressel won the par-4 ninth with a birdie and appeared to have taken the 12th for a 3-up edge.

But Pressel, who was warned about slow play as she started the back nine, took 39 seconds more than the maximum 90 seconds to make her putt at the 12th and as a result forfeited the hole, her lead plunging to 1-up.

2,000 convicted then exonerated in 23 years

WASHINGTON, 21 May—More than 2,000 people who were falsely convicted of serious crimes have been exonerated in the United States in the past 23 years, according to a new archive compiled at two universities.

There is no official record-keeping system for exonerations of convicted criminals in the country, so academics set one up.

The new national registry, or database, painstakingly assembled by the University of Michigan Law School and the Centre on Wrongful Convictions at Northwestern University School of Law, is the most complete list of exonerations ever compiled.

The database compiled and analyzed by the researchers contains information on 873 exonerations for which they have the most detailed evidence. The researchers are aware of nearly 1,200 other exonerations, for which they have less data.

They found that those 873 exonerated defendants spent a combined total of more than 10,000 years in prison, an average of more than 11 years each. Nine out of 10 of them are men and half are African-American.

Nearly half of the 873 exonerations were homicide cases, including 101 death sentences. Over one-third of the cases were sexual assaults.

DNA evidence led to exoneration in nearly one-third of the 416 homicides and in nearly two-thirds of the 305 sexual assaults.

Researchers estimate the total number of felony convictions in the United States is nearly a million a year.

Shipwreck off Mayotte kills five

PARIS, 21 May—Two adults and three children died after a fishing boat sank off Mayotte, an archipelago located in the northern Mozambique Channel in the Indian Ocean, France's BFM Television reported on Sunday.

Fifteen people were still missing after the accident occurred late Saturday afternoon, the BFM quoted a source from the French Ministry of Overseas Territories as saying.

The boat was carrying 43 people from the nearby independent nation of the Comoros.

The archipelago of the Comoros voted to become independent from France in 1975, while the Mayotte islanders opted to remain under French rule. Mayotte became an overseas department of France in 2011.

World's biggest dairy firm to develop China specific products in Shanghai

WELLINGTON, 21 May—New Zealand-based Fonterra, the world's biggest dairy company, announced on Monday it is to develop unique products for the booming Chinese market at new innovation centre in Shanghai.

The development of innovative products designed to meet the needs of Chinese consumers was critical to the integrated milk business the company was building in China, Fonterra chief executive officer Theo Spierings said at the opening, according to a statement issued by Fonterra.

"Demand for dairy nutrition is expected to double by 2020 and the way people consume dairy will change. The opening of the state-of-the-art Shanghai Innovation Centre will help us build and grow beyond our current product and ingredient offerings and better meet the needs of local Chinese consumers and customers," Spierings said.

"China is a significant priority in Fonterra's global strategy and our innovation center will help us develop unique products and formats that suit the needs of the local population," he said.

"As incomes rise across China, people are looking for nutrition that supports the health of their families, particularly young children, and dairy is one of the most nutritious foods there is. People's lives are also becoming busier, which means they're often looking for dairy products that they can eat on the go or use to make quick, easy and nutritious meals."

Fonterra China president Phillip Turner said the Shanghai Innovation Centre would allow Fonterra to work more closely with major customers and the foodservice industry, and carry out product training courses for major customers.

Public request for decreased power supply

There are 18 hydro-power stations, one coal-fired power station and 10 gas-fired power stations totalling 29 across Myanmar and they are supplying electric power to all the regions of the country.

With a full storage capacity of water in monsoon, the hydro-power plants can generate a maximum of 1270 megawatts of electricity. But the decreased level of water in the dams in summer can generate a maximum of about 1000 megawatts only.

Being operated with gas, gas-fired power plants can generate an average of 340 megawatts of electricity annually. All the power stations can therefore generate a maximum of about 1610 megawatts of electricity in the rainy season and a maximum of about 1340 megawatts in summer.

The nationwide electricity consumption in monsoon is only 1560 megawatts at a maximum. As production exceeded consumption in this season, enough electricity could be distributed to the people, factories, workshops and businesses.

However, power consumption in summer is far more than that in monsoon, and there can be a maximum of 1850 megawatts of electricity in the hot season. Since the consumption exceeded the generation of 1340 megawatts, electricity was alternatively distributed to the public, factories, workshops and businesses, dividing them into three groups.

Meanwhile, Post Nos. 73, 206, 207 and 208 of Shweli-Mansan 230-KV Power Grid were destroyed in a mine blast on 19-5-2012. Consequently, 200 megawatts of electricity being generated by Shweli Power Plant was subtracted from the total amount.

As there have been only about 1100 megawatts of electricity nationwide, State-owned steel plants, cement plants, fertilizer factories and river-water pumping projects and private industries have lost about 500 megawatts to supply to the public as a priority.

In order to ensure enough power supply in summer, plans are under way to build more power plants as a long-term project in cooperation with General Electric Co and Caterpillar Co of the United States of America.

As a long-term project, plans are also being made to build a 600-megawatt coal-fired plant near Yangon on a joint-venture basis with J Power Co of Japan and a 500-megawatt gas-fired power plant in collaboration with BKB Co of the Republic of Korea.

Myanmar has invited local and foreign companies to invest in electricity generation for boosting power supply.

The people are requested to understand the current situation in which electricity is being alternately supplied to the public dividing them into three groups, and to save electricity.

Nadal beats Djokovic to win Italian Open

ROME, 21 May—Rafael Nadal won his record sixth Italian Open title Monday by beating top-ranked Novak Djokovic 7-5, 6-3.

Djokovic made 41 unforced errors in the match, including a double-fault on the last point to give Nadal his 49th career title and his 35th on clay.

Djokovic played well at the start but the turning point came midway through the 10th game when a line judge called the Serbian's shot out. The umpire overruled the decision, but Nadal won the replayed point then held his serve to make it 5-5.

The victory is Nadal's third Italian Open victory in four years, with his winning streak interrupted last year by Djokovic. The win also moved Nadal back to No. 2 in the rankings, ahead of Roger Federer.

Monday's match was the first time the same two players competed in back-to-back finals since the tournament began in 1930.

Nadal broke first in the fifth game of the first set but Djokovic broke back when the Spaniard hit a forehand into the net.

Djokovic appeared to be in control of the match, holding to love, while Nadal was struggling with his serve, only landing 48 percent of his first attempts.

However, Djokovic appeared to be affected after a long rally ended with the overturned line call. Had the Serb won the point, it would have given him two break points.

But Nadal held and then broke in the next game, drawing Djokovic to the net before sending a sharp volley past him.

Djokovic was so angered that he smashed his racket against a net post and was given a warning.

Nadal took the first set with the second of three set points after Djokovic hit long. And the Serbian was immediately broken again in the second set as Nadal continued to control the match.

"It was a crazy match," said Sharapova. "Either one of us could have won it. There really is no loser. It was really difficult with so many swings.

It was tough having to wait two hours. It's difficult to have a loser and a winner, but I'm happy. "It's great to beat someone with the level she played last year," added Sharapova, after defeating the defending French Open champion.

Montpellier clinch maiden title as season ends

AUXERRE, 21 May—Montpellier players kept their cool to clinch a maiden Ligue 1 title with a 2-1 win at AJ Auxerre although the match descended into chaos as police were called in after local fans pelted the pitch with flares, tomatoes and toilet paper to interrupt the game three times on Sunday.

Nigeria's John Utaka scored the two goals after relegated Auxerre had opened the scoring through Olivier Kapo.

Montpellier finished the season on 82 points, leading second-placed Paris St Germain, who won 2-1 at Lorient, by three points.

Eden Hazard scored three in his farewell game as thirdplaced Lille, who will be in the Champions League playoffs next season, beat Nancy 4-1.

Olympique Lyon, who had nothing to gain or lose, finished fourth with a 4-3 defeat by visitors Nice. Girondins Bordeaux, fifth, secured a Europa League spot with a 3-2 victory at St Etienne.

Dijon and Caen were relegated to Ligue 2 with AJ Auxerre. "It's incredible, I can hardly find the words," Montpellier keeper Geoffrey Jourdain told Canal+ as fans descended on to the pitch to celebrate the title.

"Our only goal was to stay in the top flight and in the end we are champions. I'm going to enjoy it because it will probably be the only time it happens to me."
