Myanmar seafood exports to go up

Seafood exports from Myanmar are going to grow significantly this year, as European Union removed its trade restrictions imposed on Myanmar, according to Van der Pijl, business developer and consultant for the Netherlands-based socio-economic research firm.

A plan to be implemented by EU to import farmed seafood products from Myanmar would help Myanmar to ensure boosting seafood products export.

Buyers from the EU, the U.S. and, other countries are looking to the country to fulfill global short supplies of wild shrimp and other wild and farmed species such as tilapia. Myanmar produced an impressive 4.1 million tons of wild and farmed species in 2011 and is expected to produce 4.5 million tons of seafood products in 2012, according to the report.

Most of the companies that have EU approval of seafood export to Japan.

Bangladesh and Myanmar have produced Black Tiger and Pacific white shrimp which fetch a good price in the Japanese market, and the EU will be a good market as well.

However, the farmed seafood sector is struggling to be revitalized while its products are in good demand. The infrastructure of the farmed shrimp sector in Myanmar is badly affected by the natural disasters and there will be a need of financial support from international donors for its rehabilitation, said Pijl.

It is difficult to forecast whether the area will have an annual high rainfall or not. TRAFFIC RULES ENFORCEMENT

Yangon to see punitive actions against undisciplined vehicles

YANGON, 16 June — It is high time to carry out a thorough inspection of all passenger vehicles and to make necessary arrangements for the convenience and safety of passengers on board the vehicles of the bus lines under the supervision of Yangon Region All Bus-line Control Committee (Central) in the rainy season.

Road accidents and rollover crashes may occur due to weak foundation of road shoulders and big holes on some narrow roads in Yangon while overhead bridges are under construction. Lubricants and fuel oil spilled on the roads and mud which are partly covered on roads are also contributing factors to road crashes.

The onus is on all of drivers and conductors not to drive fast switching on the headlights during the heavy rains and make a dash stop while driving.

As directives have been released by Yangon Region government to take punitive actions against undisciplined vehicles that broke the traffic rules, officials concerned are urged to supervise and monitor traffic rules enforcement. — Kyemon-701

World Bank, UN join hands in conflict zones but face hurdles

A UN peacekeeper escorts UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon and World Bank President Jim Yong Kim (R) during their joint trip to Goma, in the Democratic Republic of Congo's war-torn east, on 23 May, 2013.

REUTERS

GOMA, 16 June—When the heads of the World Bank and the United Nations flew into the violence-racked African city of Goma on a cloudy day last month, it was the first time the giants of international development had joined forces in the struggle to help the world's most fragile regions.

World Bank President Jim Yong Kim and UN Secretary-General Ban

Ki-Moon travelled to three countries in the Great Lakes region in East Africa to cement a new partnership, tying $1 billion in bank money to the UN peacekeeping efforts in the region.

They announced the funding in Kinshasa, the capital of the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), even as mortar shells were falling in the country's eastern edge in Goma. But the men, both born in South Korea, pledged to continue their trip.

"We're going there because our belief is that peace, security and economic development are intertwined," Kim said in Kinshasa. "We're going with a very specific purpose in mind: there must be a peace dividend."

The organizations admit the effort to work together faces hurdles. Both have vast, unwieldy bureaucracies that have historically competed with each other, and the bank had been wary of loaning to fragile states with shaky governments and murky institutions.

Further, development analysts warn that no one has yet figured out a surefire way to bring lasting development to countries caught in cycles of violence. But with half the world's poorest people set to live in conflict-torn regions by 2018, the institutions can ill afford to do nothing, the World Bank and analysts say.—Reuters

Deadly Colorado wildfire mostly contained

DENVER, 16 June—Crews battling a deadly wildfire that is the most destructive on record in Colorado have contained more than half of the 15,500-acre (6,275-hectare) blaze that has incinerated nearly 500 homes outside Colorado Springs, authorities said on Saturday.

Cooler temperatures, calmer winds and a rain-storm that moved over the burn area on Friday allowed fire managers to increase the containment of the fire to 55 percent from 30 percent the day before.

But the number of homes confirmed destroyed by the so-called Black Forest Fire jumped to 483 on Saturday, compared with a count of about 420 homes on Friday, the El Paso County Sheriff's Office said on its website.

The tally increased as assessment crews combed through areas that had cooled, El Paso County Sheriff Terry Maketa told reporters earlier in the day.

Maketa said the bulk of the homes were lost in the first 24 hours of the blaze, and voiced optimism the threat from the fire was diminishing.

"I think we're getting the upper hand," Maketa said, adding that when he toured the area, it "looked like a nuclear bomb went off."

Fueled by tinder-dry vegetation and fanned by high winds, the blaze erupted on Tuesday in a wooded area northeast of Colorado Springs.

Flames roared out of control for two days, charring a 24-square-mile (62-square-km) swath through rolling hills on the outskirts of Colorado's second-largest city.

Two people were found dead inside the garage of a home that was reduced to ashes when flames ripped through the area. The sheriff said the cause of the fire was under investigation, but he believed it was caused by humans, because there were no lightning strikes in the area that could have sparked the blaze.—Reuters

Police raid on Istanbul park triggers night of rioting

ISTANBUL, 16 June—Thousands of people took to the streets of Istanbul overnight on Sunday, erecting barricades and starting bonfires, after riot police firing teargas and water cannon stormed a park at the centre of two weeks of anti-government unrest.

Lines of police backed by armoured vehicles sealed off Taksim Square in the centre of the city as officers raided the adjoining Gezi Park late on Saturday, where protesters had been camped in a ramshackle settlement of tents. Prime Minister Tayyip Erdogan had warned hours earlier that security forces would clear the square, the centre of more than two weeks of fierce anti-government protests that spread to cities across the country, unless the demonstrators withdrew before a ruling party rally in Istanbul on Sunday.

"We have our Istanbul rally tomorrow. I say it clearly: Taksim Square must be evacuated, otherwise this country's security forces know how to evacuate it," he told tens of thousands of flag-waving supporters at a rally in Ankara. Protesters took to the streets in several neighbourhoods across Istanbul following the raid on Gezi Park, ripping up metal fences, paving stones and advertising hoardings to build barricades and lighting bonfires of trash in the streets. chanted, "Tayyip, resign."

Local television footage showed groups of demonstrators blocking a main highway to Ataturk airport on the western edge of the city, while to the east, several hundred walked towards a main bridge crossing the Bosphorus waterway towards Taksim. Thousands more rallied in the working-class Gazi neighbourhood, which saw heavy clashes with police in the 1990s, while protesters also gathered in Ankara around the central Kugulu Park, including opposition MPs who sat in the streets in an effort to prevent the police from firing teargas.

US puts jets in Jordan, fuels Russian fear of Syria no-fly zone

BEIRUT, 16 June—The United States said on Saturday it would keep F-16 fighters and Patriot missiles in Jordan at Amman's request, and Russia bristled at the possibility they could be used to enforce a no-fly zone inside Syria.

Washington, which has long called for President Bashar al-Assad to step down, pledged military support to Syrian rebels this week, citing what it said was the Syrian military's use of chemical weapons—an allegation Damascus has denied. Defence Secretary Chuck Hagel has approved a Jordanian request for American F-16s and Patriot missiles to remain in the Western-backed kingdom after a joint military exercise there next week, a Pentagon spokesman said.

Western diplomats said on Friday Washington was considering a limited no-fly zone over parts of Syria, but the White House noted later that it would be far harder and costlier to set one up there than it was in Libya, saying the United States had no national interest in pursuing that option.

Russia, an ally of Damascus and fierce opponent of outside military intervention in Syria, said any attempt to impose a no-fly zone using F-16s and Patriots from Jordan would be illegal. "You don't have to be a great expert to understand that this will violate international law," Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said.

EU quizzes telecom firms, handset makers on Google's Android

BRUSSELS, 16 June—European Union antitrust regulators are asking mobile telecoms operators and handset makers if their Android deals with Google block rivals in mobile telephony, a move that could lead to a second investigation into the company.

Google is already seeking to settle a three-year probe into complaints it squeezed out online search rivals.

The Internet search company has offered concessions including labelling its products in search results and providing links to competing sites. EU Competition Commissioner Joaquin Almunia has said he will likely ask for more.

The EU regulators' latest action was prompted by complaints, including from Microsoft and Nokia, to the European Commission in April that accused Google of using its Android operating system for smartphones to divert traffic to its search engine.

Android is widely used in smartphones and tablets, with a 60 percent global market share compared to Apple's 19 percent, according to consultancy Canals.

The Commission asked telecoms providers and handset makers whether the Android agreements with Google "contain clauses preventing or limiting you from launching/distributing non-Android devices," according to a questionnaire seen by Reuters.

The EU competition authority also wanted to know if there were restrictions for Android devices that did not meet Google's compatibility requirements.

Regulators asked if Google-branded Android devices could be shipped with mobile services that compete with the Internet search engine's own mobile services.

Google spokesman Al Verney said: "Android is an open platform that fosters competition. Handset makers, carriers and consumers can decide how to use Android, including which applications they want to use."

Android mascots are lined up in the demonstration area at the Google I/O Developers Conference in the Moscone Centre in San Francisco, California, on 10 May, 2011.—REUTERS

Respondents have until 26 July to reply to the list of 82 questions, which could determine whether the Commission will open a new investigation into the world's most popular Internet search engine.

Google to launch new Nexus 7 tablet in July for $229

WASHINGTON, 16 June—Google managed to make a big splash in the tablet market with the launch of its Nexus 7 tablet last year. It was expected that the company will be unveiling its successor at this year's Google I/O but that did not happen. A recent report by CNET claims that Google is very close to launching its next generation of Nexus 7 tablet. The website has got this bit of information from market research company IHS. The report also illustrates that Japan Display and AUO have been roped to manufacture the display second generation Nexus 7. In addition to this, Quanta is the company that is making the tablet itself. Another news report by DigiTimes claims that this Nexus 7 tablet will indeed start retailing in the month of July. This report adds that Google will price the 16GB version of Nexus 7 successor for $229. The report adds that the price of this tablet has been deliberately kept higher than its predecessor so that the company is not competing directly with the low-end tablet makers.

The other rumoured specifications of the forthcoming 7-inch tablet from Google include a 1920 x1200 display, with a pixel density of 323 pixels per inch. It is expected that this tablet will be powered by Qualcomm's Snapdragon processor rather than the

NVIDIA Tegra 3 processor on-board its predecessor. This tablet from Google is likely to compete head on with next generation iPad mini and Kindle Fire HD tablets from Apple and Amazon.—PTI

The phone has been listed on Flipkart and Infibeam. While Flipkart mentions that the phone will be available by the fifth week of June, Infibeam says that it will launch on 22 June. Flipkart is also offering zero processing fee if you buy the phone on EMIs. It comes with a 1 year warranty.

The Samsung Galaxy Mega 6.3 sports a 6.3-inch 720x1280 display and features the same camera as that of Galaxy Mega 5.8. It is powered by a dual-core processor clocked at 1.7GHz.

The Galaxy Mega has 1.5GB of RAM, Bluetooth 4.0, Wi-Fi 802.11 a/b/g/n and A-GPS. The phone comes with a 3,200 mAh battery and runs Android 4.2 Jelly Bean. The phone comes with 16GB internal storage capacity and has a microSD card for expanding the storage up to 64GB. The phone was launched at an MRP of Rs 31,490.

Along with the Mega 6.3, Samsung had also launched the Galaxy Mega 5.8 smartphone, which is available for Rs 24,900 on both commerce websites.

The Galaxy Mega smartphones offer split screen capability for a variety of applications including email, messages, 'MyFiles', 'S Memo', 'S Planner', amongst others.

The devices will also feature the much touted 'Air View' feature, that lets users preview information in emails, photos in Gallery, and speed dial contacts without opening them.—PTI

Microsoft mocks Apple's iPad in yet another television commercial

SAN FRANCISCO, 16 June—Microsoft has mocked Apple iPad yet again in a new TV commercial. This time the competition is between the Apple iPad and the Windows RT based Dell XPS 10 tablet. The ad features a Siri voice over just like Microsoft's previous commercial that compared the iPad with the Asus VivoTab PC. Surely, Microsoft is taking competition seriously and is using humour to make that point. The commercial begins with Microsoft taking on the iPad's home screen and it's no zoom out limitation. The commercial has a user use a pinch out gesture on the iPad only to have Siri say, "I am sorry. I don't zoom out like that." and mumble "Ouch" in protest. The Dell XPS 10 on the other hand, easily zooms out to view the entire start screen on the tablet.

The next take is on the lack of an SD card slot on the iPad. Just as a user unsuccessfully tries to insert a microSD card at various places on the iPad, the commercial has Siri say "You can't put an SD card there. Or there. Or there." The Dell tablet on the other hand easily puts the card on and displays the photographs on the SD card. The multitasking feature on Windows 8 RT that lets you perform two tasks at once has been touted as a strength time and again. In the commercial, as the Windows tablet splits its screen to watch a movie and browse the calendar simultaneously, Siri appreciates the coolness of the feature by saying, "You can do two things at once. That's cool."

Finally the prices of the two tablets are revealed with the 32GB iPad priced at $599 and the 32GB Dell XPS 10 Windows RT Tablet coming with a limited offer price of $399. Siri's response to the price comparison is, "That's not cool." Watch the commercial to decide whether you think the advert is cool or not.

Microsoft perhaps seems to be on a mocking marathon when it comes to its rivals. The Windows tablets with the Siri voice overs are a great dig at the most popular tablet in the market. Also, the company's commercial for Nokia Lumia 920 with a 'Don't fight. Switch' message, is also an interesting way to suggest that amidst the Android and iOS rivalry it might be wise to just 'switch' to the Windows Phone.—PTI

Tesco stops sourcing from a Bangladesh factory due to safety concerns

LONDON, 16 June—Tesco, the world's No 3 retailer, has stopped sourcing clothes from a factory in Bangladesh after discovering serious problems with the safety of a building, the company said on Saturday.

The move follows a survey the British-based supermarket chain conducted in the wake of the collapse of the Rana Plaza factory complex in Dhaka in April that killed 1,129 people.

"A structural survey of a site we source from in Bangladesh, owned by Liberty Fashions, has revealed serious problems with the safety of one of the buildings," Tesco said in a statement.

"We immediately made the owners aware of our findings, and tried to find an alternative to ceasing production of Tesco products on this site. We are disappointed that this was not possible.

"Our concerns about the structure of this building are so serious that we decided our only option was to stop taking clothes from this site with immediate effect."

Tesco, which has promised to conduct structural surveys of all the factories it sources from, said it had urged the owners of the site to stop all production and to evacuate the premises to ensure the safety of its workers. It had also informed the relevant authorities, other customers of the site and the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BMGEA) of the survey results and its decision to stop sourcing from the site.—Reuters

BOJ's REITs purchase to exceed previous estimate

TOKYO, 16 June—The Bank of Japan will likely expand its purchase of Japanese real estate investment trusts (J-REITs) beyond its buying scheme announced earlier this year as part of the central bank's hyper-easing steps, the Nikkei business daily said on Saturday.

The BOJ said in April that it would boost the balance of its J-REITs holding by 30 billion yen ($317.18 million) a year, and forecast 140 billion yen in holding for the end of 2013.

The central bank's aggressive buying, however, has already boosted the balance of its J-REITs holding closer to the 140 billion yen level, triggering a decline in the J-REITs market amid worries that the bank's buying spree will soon lose steam.

The Nikkei said, without citing sources, that the BOJ is now expected to continue purchasing J-REITs so that the balance of the central bank's holding at the end of the year will likely exceed the 140 billion yen mark by up to 10 billion yen.

The Tokyo Stock Market's J-REITs subindex .TREIT fell 19 over the past two months.

Bank of Japan Governor Haruhiko Kuroda said on Tuesday that it is difficult to boost J-REITs buying within a short term because the J-REITs market itself is not big, but that the bank will closely watch the market and respond flexibly.

Legislator Odalis Monzon said the proposal would "prohibit all types of baby bottles" as a way to improve children's health.

"We want to increase the love (between mother and child) because this has been lost as a result of these transnational companies selling formula," Monzon said on state television on Thursday. She said the Law for the Promotion and Support for Breast-Feeding, passed in 2007, did not establish any sanctions for using formula. However, she did not say what the sanctions might be if the proposed change to prohibit bottle feeding is passed by Congress, where the Socialist Party has a majority.

Monzon said, however, that exceptions would be allowed, such as in the case of the death of a mother, or for women with limited breast milk production, as determined by the health ministry. She did not respond to phone calls seeking details, including how long babies would be breast-fed.

Such legislation would likely raise the ire of opposition sympathizers who say the government of the late President Hugo Chavez excessively extended the reach of the state into the lives of private citizens. "People are free to feed their children as they see fit," said Ingrid Rivero, a 27-year-old mother in Caracas. "My daughter stopped breast feeding after seven months. What can I do? Force her?"

Chavez ally Nicolas Maduro, who was elected in April after his mentor's death from cancer, has vowed to extend his predecessor's 14-year self-styled revolution that enjoyed strong support among the country's poor.

Spain's Rajoy calls on ECB to create bank lending scheme for smaller companies

MADRID, 16 June—Spanish Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy on Saturday called on the European Central Bank to create a cheap funding scheme for small businesses, mirroring those used by authorities outside the euro zone to try and get credit flowing via banks.

Rajoy, who has previously urged the ECB to change its collateral rules to help smaller companies access financing at better conditions, said the ECB could emulate plans such as a Bank of England scheme.

The British central bank launched a 'Funding for Lending' scheme in mid-2012 aimed at encouraging banks to give credit by providing them with cheap financing.

"I would like the ECB to act like other central banks, to do as the Bank of England has done—giving cheap loans to financial entities so that these financial entities can lend at cheaper rates to small and medium-sized companies," Rajoy said at an event in Tarragona, northern Spain. Small companies in southern Europe are having to pay higher rates for financing than those in other EU countries, a problem exacerbated by a prolonged recession in Spain.—Reuters

Attacks on university women, hospital leave 21 dead in Pakistan

Firefighters spray water to extinguish fire from a burning bus at the site of a bomb blast in Quetta on 15 June, 2013.—REUTERS

ISLAMABAD, 16 June—At least 21 people, including 11 female university students, are dead and dozens are wounded after an explosion inside a student bus and an attack on a hospital in Pakistan's Quetta on Saturday afternoon, hospital and other officials said. The incident began when a bomb exploded as students at Sardar Bahadur Khan Women's University were getting on the bus in the university compound on Brewery Road in the capital of Baluchistan Province.

Hospital officials said several of the wounded students were brought to hospital in critical condition. Then, a second bomb went off at the Bolan Medical Complex in Quetta as the injured from the first explosion were being given emergency medical care.

Armed men then took positions inside and on the rooftop of the hospital and were firing on people trying to leave or enter the hospital building. The explosion in the hospital took place when senior administration and city police officials had already rushed to the hospital and it was thronged with relatives of the students killed or injured in the earlier bomb attack on the bus.

Later reports said female students and seven others, including doctors and nurses, were killed in the explosion inside the operating theatre of the Bolan Medical Complex. Khalid Hussain, a doctor still locked inside the hospital, told the ARY News Channel that several of the wounded students who were receiving medical aid in the operating were killed by the explosion reportedly set off by a suicide bomber.

Why the World Cup cannot save Brazil's tourism industry

Workers prepare the Arena Pernambuco stadium in Sao Lourenco da Mata, a suburb of Recife on 10 June, 2013.—REUTERS

RECIFE, (Brazil), 16 June—For football fans flocking to Confederations Cup matches in Brazil's tropical northeast next week, getting tickets to the stadium should be simple—but two in three will not find accommodations in the host city Recife.

Officials are sending visitors as far as 120 kilometres (75 miles) inland to spend the night, a detour on par with staying in Philadelphia for a New York Knicks game.

The tournament starting on Saturday, a dress rehearsal for the 2014 World Cup, will lay bare for visitors what may surprise many: despite gorgeous beaches, a tempting climate and legendary hospitality, Brazil's tourism industry pales next to its neighbours.

The country takes up half the South American continent but receives just a fifth of its international visits.

The land of Carnival and beach cocktails ranks behind everywhere in the western hemisphere but Venezuela in foreign tourists per capita.

To be sure, it is exceedingly difficult to find someone who regrets a vacation in Brazil. The country's growing middle class has also provided enough domestic demand to make its tourism industry the world's sixth largest.

As with much of the Brazilian economy, a captive local market seems to have made things too easy for the sector, pushing up prices, sapping competitiveness and contributing to a troubling foreign deficit.—Reuters

South Africa's Mandela 'recovering very well', grandson says

QUNU S AFRICA, 16 June—Former South African president and anti-apartheid hero Nelson Mandela is recovering well from a lung infection which has kept him in a serious condition in hospital for a week, his grandson said on Saturday.

The comment by Mandla Mandela was the latest indication that the health of his 94-year-old grandfather, South Africa's first black president, was showing signs of improvement. Mandela has been receiving visits from family members after he was rushed to hospital a week ago with a recurrence of lung problems.

"Madiba is recovering very well and looks good," Mandla Mandela said in Qunu, a village in the Eastern Cape Province where Mandela was born and spent his early years.

Speaking in Xhosa at a funeral of another relative, Mandla used the clan name 'Madiba' by which Mandela is popularly known.

"I thank the nation and the world for the prayers for Madiba, and the doctors and the office of the ANC for keeping the family updated," he said.

South Africa's government said on Thursday that Mandela was continuing to recover but his condition remained serious.

Mandela's hospitalisation is his fourth since December and has reinforced growing awareness among South Africa's 53 million people that they will one day have to say goodbye to the father of the "Rainbow Nation" created from the ashes of apartheid.

Mandela has a history of lung problems dating back to his time at the windswept Robben Island prison camp near Cape Town. He was released in 1990 after 27 years behind bars and went on to serve as president from 1994 to 1999.—Reuters

Xi-Obama summit opens up possibilities for new advances in China-US ties

WASHINGTON, 16 June—The first summit between Chinese President Xi Jinping and his US counterpart Barack Obama in California last week opened up possibilities for making new progress in advancing bilateral relations, former US Ambassador to China Stapleton Roy said recently.

"It's very significant that both top leaders have concluded that the trend toward growing strategic rivalry was damaging to the interests of their countries," Roy said during a conference call hosted by the National Committee on the US-China relations on Thursday.

Fortunately, Xi and Obama reached consensus that they must reverse recent trends by creating a new type of relationship between major countries in the summit, which included informal one-on-one talks, Roy said. "In that respect, the summit was very successful," he said. "It reinforced the engagement we are already engaging in and opened up possibilities for moving in new areas."

It is also significant that China is now talking about creating a new type of military-to-military relationship, one of the least developed areas of cooperation between the two countries, Roy noted.

As far as the Korean Peninsula is concerned, the tension originated during 2010-2011 has been replaced by a reaffirmation that both countries believe denuclearization of the peninsula is a common strategic interest, he said.

"(Each side) struck positive notes about where we want to go," Roy said.

"This is important because we need from the two presidents a sense of strategic direction of where we want the relationship to go. And I think that has been provided more clearly now than ever before," he said.

"Both sides want to move the relationship in a positive direction," he said.

The upcoming China-US Strategic and Economic Dialogue will provide some feedback as to whether the discussions between Xi and Obama are being reflected at the senior official levels, Roy added.—Xinhua

Colombian police rescue two kidnapped Spanish tourists

BOGOTA, 16 June—Colombian police early on Saturday rescued two Spanish tourists held captive by a criminal gang for nearly a month in northern Colombia, finding them sleeping in hammocks, and two men collecting a ransom were arrested in Spain, police officials said.

Maria Concepcion Marlaska, 43, and Angel Fernandez, 49, were seized on 17 May while travelling by car to the popular tourist destination of Cabo de la Vela on Colombia's northern peninsula.

"They are free and in good health," Colonel Elber Velasco, commander of La Guajira Province police, told reporters. "It was a lightning rescue that required very important intelligence, an operation that did not require the use of weapons."

As part of a coordinated effort with Spanish authorities, a ransom worth 500,000 euros ($667,000) was paid in Madrid, General Humberto Guatibonza, head of Colombia's anti-kidnapping police, told reporters.

Spanish police later arrested the two bag-men, one Spanish and one from Syria, he said. The cash was recovered.

The tourists were freed just after midnight near the city of Maicao on a stretch of land which juts into the Caribbean Sea and borders northwestern Venezuela.

Police officials said no arrests were made during the rescue and gave no other details about the operation beyond saying the couple were found sleeping in hammocks.

The couple were held in the homes of several Wayuu Indians close to the border with Venezuela. They were chained at times, according to Velasco.—Reuters

The canal passes through Madaya Township, Patheingyi Township and Broadest public support

The main task of the present government is to move towards an economy that is equitable, that is fair and based on a level playing field, that develops our abundant natural wealth but in a way that protects our natural environment. To achieve all this we need maximum international support to train and educate, share knowledge, trade and invest, and encourage all the people to do the same.

The past two years under the incumbent government have been a time of transformation in Myanmar. Military rule ended, a new constitution was put into effect and the nation has begun a series of political and economic reforms that we hope will build a strong democracy and a strong market-oriented economy. And we are trying hard to end Myanmar's isolation, see the removal of all sanctions, and make the contributions we can to both regional and global security and development. At the same time the government is working hard to peacefully end the armed conflicts that have plagued the nation since independence in 1948.

A key part of that agenda will be to reach peace agreements with all non-state armed groups. The government in office has reached ceasefires with ten non-state armed groups. We are confident we can soon reach a ceasefire with the remaining major non-state armed group, the Kachin Independence Organization and Army. But that is not enough.

Our goal cannot be less than sustainable peace. It will mean compromise. It will mean the further devolution of power to the state and regional levels. It will mean new agreements on resource sharing. We wish to do this in a way that includes all citizens. We want to include not only the armed groups, but also political parties and civil society from all ethnic communities in the political dialogues to come. Peace must be rooted in the broadest possible participation of public support.

Situation in Asian region

Asian region has lagged behind in development of Public Service Media except India, South Korea and Japan where PSMs have developed while Europe has seen sustainable development in PSMs. So, Asia-Pacific Institute of Broadcast Development, AIBD has strived for emergence of PSMs in the region since early 1990.

However, the director of AIBD confirmed that there are many challenges of ensuring development of PSM in Asia and Pacific region due to priority given to economic sector, public finance limitation, opposition of influential private media, misunderstanding on the nature of PSM, and lack of human resources and political willingness. Nonetheless, countries in the region acknowledged the need to introduce a type of PSM aiming at ensuring implementation of media pluralism, anti-media monopoly and free flow of information to all citizens.

So, a meeting of Information Ministers of Asia-Pacific Region held on 27 May 2004 endorsed the Bangkok Declaration that encourages to implement PSMs in order to gain benefits of informing the public, improving freedom of expression, contributing towards free flow of information and ensuring mass participation.

The Bangkok Declaration includes points to be adhered to guarantee financial and editorial freedom in PSMs and to share information to all citizens and methods of providing funds to PSMs.

Indonesia was a pioneer of implementing PSM among ASEAN countries including Myanmar. When it initiated reform process in 1998, state-owned television and radio broadcasting centre were transformed into PSMs. According to a report of Mapping Media Policy in Indonesia compiled by Centre for Innovation Policy and Governance with the help of Ford Foundation in March 2012, only media with profit motive extremely developed and media monopoly occurred as Indonesia failed to systematically manage the media sector.

The report revealed that Indonesian PSMs lacked the competence to manage themselves as the organization had many problems and it is inappropriate that media freedom is used for seeking economic profit, not for the sake of the people. The report also pointed out that media services should be run in a separate way as they are different from other economic entities. In real situation, it is found that not only newspapers, journals and magazines and private television and radio broadcasting centres but also all media services including popular Internet media websites are owned by 12 media groups.

In Thailand, Thai Independence Television, TITV was transformed into the public service broadcasting by law in 2008. It is found that Thai PSB has gained recognition at home and abroad for its qualified services even though it was transformed into PSB just in 2008.

The Philippines has not yet achieved success for establishing PSM despite its efforts since 2007. Amy Daquilanea-Tanoy, Associate Professor, Broadcasting, of the University of the Philippines Visayas, pointed out that the reason why the Philippines did not succeed in it was political unwillingness of the government and the parliament, the opposition of private commercial media firms in their own interests and lack of thorough public knowledge on PSM.

While PSM is introduced to ASEAN member countries, Myanmar has brought the PSM bill to the parliament. The bill has become a subject of debate and it deserves to be debated from different points of views and ideologies as Myanmar is a democracy. We all welcome it.

Banya Aung

However, as part of efforts for transition to democracy, Myanmar is carrying out to modify some existing institutions, abolish some and establish new ones at the same time.

The current PSM bill is the new one and it is aimed at establishing a new institution which has not yet established in Myanmar. Therefore, to be suitable for the situation of Myanmar, the PSM bill is drafted based on PSMs in European countries which started it and gained recognition of their PSMs from international community.

However, it is found that most criticisms of the bill come from personal feelings, doubts and private interests, not meeting with international media standard. In fact, criticisms of the PSM bill which is the first ever institution of Myanmar, should come from international standards to bring benefits to all stakeholders rather than from personal feelings and past experiences. It is hoped that the information included in this article would help the bill to a certain extent to be looked at objectively.

US spy agency paper says fewer than 300 phone numbers closely scrutinized

An undated aerial handout photo shows the National Security Agency (NSA) headquarters building in Fort Meade, Maryland.—REUTERS

WASHINGTON, 16 June — The US government only searched for detailed information on calls involving fewer than 300 specific phone numbers among the millions of raw phone records collected by the National Security Agency in 2012, according to a government paper obtained by Reuters on Saturday.

The unclassified paper was circulated on Saturday within the government by US intelligence agencies and apparently is an attempt by spy agencies and the Obama administration to rebut accusations that it overreached in investigating potential militant plots.

The administration has said that even though the NSA, according to top-secret documents made public by former agency contractor Edward Snowden, collects massive amounts of data on message traffic from both US based telephone and internet companies, such data collection is legal, subject to tight controls and does not intrude on the privacy of ordinary Americans.

The paper circulated on Saturday said that data from the NSA phone and email collections programmes not only led US investigators to the ringleader of a plot to attack New York's subway system in 2009, but also to one of his co-conspirators in the United States.

The paper discusses an NSA programme that collects "metadata"—raw information that does not identify individual telephone subscribers—from major US phone companies showing all calls made by those companies' subscribers to phones within the United States and overseas.

It also mentions another NSA programme, called Prism in leaked documents, that collects from internet companies what the paper says are emails of foreigners who might be of interest to counterterrorism or counter-proliferation investigators.

Millions of phone records were collected in 2012, but the paper says US authorities only looked in detail at the records linked to fewer than 300 phone numbers.—Reuters

Italian PM announces package to fund public works, cut red tape

ROME, 16 June—Italian Prime Minister Enrico Letta on Saturday announced a package of measures to fund public works projects and cut red tape in a bid to pull the euro zone's third-largest economy out of recession while respecting European budget limits.

Letta said the government would meet again on Wednesday and Friday to introduce further measures to simplify bureaucracy, loosen hiring rules and fight youth unemployment.

The decree law reduces some of the harshest penalties available to a much-hated tax collection agency, Equitalia, and streamlines the legal process for civil disputes. "These are all measures that are needed to restart the country's economy," Letta said after a cabinet meeting that lasted more than five hours. They include a "significant impulse for many public works projects", he said.

The decree frees up nearly 3 billion euros for public works projects this year, which will create 30,000 temporary construction jobs, the Public Works

Ministry said in a statement. The funds will be re-directed from other projects that were not going to be able to spend the money this year, Public Works Minister Maurizio Lupi said.

About 600 million

EgyptAir plane diverted after threatening note found

CAIRO, 16 June—An EgyptAir jet heading to New York from Cairo was diverted and landed in Scotland on Saturday after a passenger found a note in a toilet containing a threat to set the plane on fire, the Egyptian airline told Reuters.

The pilot informed air traffic control and landed at Glasgow Prestwick Airport, where the 310 passengers disembarked, Tawfik Assy, chairman of the state-owned airline, said in Cairo.

A note written in English and reading "This flight will be on fire" was found next to a pencil in one of the plane's toilets by a woman passenger, Assy said.

Once the crew were made aware, the pilot diverted. "According to the rules, we have to be on the ground as soon as possible," Assy said. Scottish police confirmed the incident.

In its latest report on Syrian refugees, the UN agency said more than 455,000 Syrian refugees have registered with UN offices in Lebanon while over 75,000 others are waiting for their registration process to complete.

The registered refugees are benefiting from aid provided by the UN, the Lebanese government and various nongovernmental aid agencies, according to the report.

The report added 167,900 Syrian refugees have been registered in north Lebanon; 156,500 in the eastern Bekaa region; 77,500 in Beirut and Mount Lebanon and 53,600 in south Lebanon.

Lebanon has called on the international community to help bear its burden of hosting the Syrian refugees, who are expected to exceed

1 million by the end of the year.

Earlier this month, Lebanese President Michel Suleiman sounded the alarm on Lebanon's incapacity of dealing with the rampant spate of displaced Syrians coming into the country. UN Higher Commissioner for Refugees Antonio Guterres said last month that the number of refugees in Lebanon had surpassed 25 percent of its population and that they were inflicting a huge burden on the government and people of Lebanon.—Xinhua

Regional leaders weigh in on Zimbabwe's poll date

MAPUTO, 16 June—Southern African leaders on Saturday urged Zimbabwe to consider delaying the general elections set on 31 July by the country's veteran leader Robert Mugabe, citing the need to prepare "peaceful, credible, free and fair elections."

The 15-member Southern Africa Development Community (SADC), which mediated the Zimbabwean political crisis during the 2008 elections, convened a special summit on Saturday in Mozambican capital Maputo, attended by Mugabe and Zimbabwean Prime Minister Morgan Tsvangirai as well as leaders from other SADC states including South African President Jacob Zuma, the facilitator of the Zimbabwe political dialogue.

After one day's close-door session, the regional bloc's secretary general Tomaz Salomao told reporters that the summit "agreed on the need of the government of Zimbabwe to engage the constitutional court to request more time beyond the 31 July deadline."

Meanwhile, Zuma was urged to "make more efforts" to ensure the country's major political parties to undertake immediate measures to create conducive environment for holding peaceful, credible, free and fair elections, Salomao said.

The Constitutional Court of Zimbabwe earlier this month ruled that the country's harmonized elections, which combine presidential, parliamentary, and council polls on the same day, should be held no later than 31 July.

President Mugabe on Thursday proclaimed the election day on 31 July, a decision denounced by his arch-rival Prime Minister Morgan Tsvangirai, arguing that little time is left for crucial reforms to ensure a credible vote.

In response to the call of the SADC summit, Mugabe spoke through state media that it remains to be seen if the Constitutional Court will grant the relief. "Perhaps we should appeal to the court to examine the reason for the argument ... for giving the people a little longer time," Mugabe said.

Diving supplies prepared for China's manned sub

ABOARD XIANGY ANGHONG 09, 16 June—The crew of China's manned deep-sea submersible Jiaolong has finished preparing underwater supplies ahead of the mission's first diving operation, scientists said on Saturday.

The supplies prepared aboard the Xiangyanghong 09 oceanographic vessel carrying Jiaolong include daily and emergency materials, said Tang Jialing, one of the divers on the mission.

Early on Thursday morning, Jiaolong reached a cold spring operation area where the water depth is no more than 1,000 metres amid high waves and strong gales. The adverse weather forced the sub to move on very dangerous and that the country doesn't need narrow political ideals, according to the president who urged people not to believe false publicity, noting that he believes the people will make a decision that won't ruin their children's future.

Having declared open a renewed section of a highway connecting the north and south of the country, known as the A-9 road, and a new airstrip in Iranamadu, a short distance from Kilinochchi, which was used by the rebels during the war, Rajapaksa said that during the past four years, the region has seen many new facilities in a number of sectors including housing, road development, power, education, health, trade and banking.

The Sri Lankan army defeated the rebels in May 2009 and since then the war-affected north has been developed with local and foreign assistance.

from the area, but scientists nevertheless installed and tested research devices.

On Saturday, the mission's crew members prepared enough oxygen supplies for the sub in normal and emergency conditions, as well as enough back-up oxygen to last 60 hours.

They also finished preparing food, drinking water and other necessary supplies including cameras, urinals and computers designed to be resistant to moisture, salt spray and fungus.

It is expected that Jiaolong will now return to the cold spring area. The time of its diving operations will be decided based on sea conditions.—Xinhua

Rate of births from donor eggs trebles in 3 years in Japan

TOKYO, 16 June—The percentage of births from donor eggs more than trebled in Japan in 2012 from three years earlier, a government survey showed Saturday.

The rate rose to 0.051 percent in 2012 from 0.015 percent in 2009, having increased each year, according to the survey by a study group of the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare.

The survey found that donor eggs were involved in 117 births from among the 163 hospitals that responded to the survey about babies delivered between January 2009 and September 2012.

The questionnaire was sent to 302 medical institutions nationwide by the research group led by Keio University professor Yasunori Yoshimura.

“Our survey suggests 300 to 400 babies are born from donor eggs each year in Japan,” Yoshimura said.

The average age of women who received donor eggs was 45.2.

Of the 117 births from donor eggs, 65 cases used eggs donated from the United States, 18 from Thailand, seven from Japan, four from South Korea and one each from Taipei, Malaysia and Russia.

Women aged 45-49 accounted for the largest number—46—of women giving birth from donor eggs.

Four women were 55 or older.

Some 68 percent experienced pregnancy complications such as hypertension among those who attempted to have babies by using donor eggs.

Debate is expected to intensify in Japan about the health risks faced by older women becoming pregnant and over the establishment of rules regarding donating and receiving eggs, observers say.—Kyodo News

State Grid expects more summer power demand

BEIJING, 16 June—The State Grid Corporation of China (SGCC), the country's biggest power distributor, said on Saturday that electricity demand is expected to increase 8.4 percent year on year this summer in the regions it covers.

The growth is 5.3 percentage points higher than that of last summer, said the company, which supplies power to 80 percent of China's territory.

Seven provincial-level grids will see power demand grow by over 10 percent, with most of them in less-developed western regions, said the company.

The SGCC said it is launching safety inspections on power lines, and taking precautions to minimize the impact of thunder and heavy rain on power transmission.

China's power consumption increased 4.9 percent in the first five months of 2013 from the same period last year, the National Energy Administration said Friday. News of the soft growth followed a string of other key economic data that has pointed to subdued strength in the world's second-largest economy.

China's industrial production rose 9.2 percent year on year in May, while the producer price index, a measure of inflation at the wholesale level, fell for the 15th straight month in May.

All eyes on 37th session of World Heritage Committee in Cambodia

PHNOM PENH, 16 June—The 37th session of the World Heritage Committee (WHC) will begin on Sunday at Cambodian capital's Peace Palace with the participation of around 1,300 delegates from more than 120 countries, said a media statement released by host Cambodia.

Cambodia is the fourth Asian country, which was elected as host country of the 37th WHC session from 16 to 27 June, the statement said on Wednesday.

The session will be opened at the Peace Palace in Phnom Penh in the evening of 16 June by Prime Minister Hun Sen and closed in Siem Reap Cultural City on 27 June by Deputy Prime Minister and Cabinet Minister Sok An.

Besides the local media, some 350 foreign journalists have registered to cover the 12-day event.

Phay Siphan, Spokesman for Cambodia's Council of Ministers, said it is a pride for Cambodia to host such a significant meeting and it would be an opportunity to show the world about the richness of Cambodia's culture and civilization.

“Cambodia has nearly 1,000 ancient temples and is the country with the oldest culture in Southeast Asia,” he told Xinhua on Saturday. “The session will be the chance to tell the world that Cambodia is rich in culture and civilization and is putting its efforts to protect and conserve those ancient temples for tourists and next generations.”

According to the statement, the upcoming session would identify, on the basis of nominations dossiers submitted by States Parties, cultural and natural properties of Outstanding Universal Value which are to be listed.

It would also review the state of conservation of properties inscribed on the World Heritage List and decide which properties need to be placed in the World Heritage List in Danger or to be removed from the World Heritage List.

In addition, it would examine international assistance requests managed by the World Heritage Fund.

UAE lenders seek to lure SMEs community

DUBAI, 16 June — Amid fierce competition in retail banking, local and foreign lenders in the United Arab Emirates (UAE) increasingly lure the growing community of small and medium-sized enterprises, while entrepreneurs still complain about multiple headwinds.

With the UAE economy booming, the 23 local banks and 28 foreign banks present, on almost weekly basis, new solutions for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), which according to the ministry of economy, account for over 90 percent of all businesses in the Gulf Arab country, a major oil supplier.

Earlier last week, Dubai's biggest lender operating in line with Islamic law or Shar'iah Emirates Islamic Bank, known as EIB, launched a finance for new products for SMEs wishing to purchase machinery, equipment and company cars. There are some 230,000 SMEs licensed in the UAE which has about 8 million residents.

A month ago, the UAE's biggest lender by assets Emirates NBD introduced RISE, an e-platform in cyberspace that provides SME business owners in the UAE an organized channel to learn, connect and grow their businesses. Ajman Bank, an Islamic financial institution from the same-named UAE sheikhdom, established Mahra (Arabic for filly), a segment which is solely run by women bankers exclusive for female customers, especially women entrepreneurs.

According to Faisal Aqil, the deputy CEO of Emirates Islamic Bank and responsible for consumer wealth management, retail banking is the most competitive segment in UAE banking. "Because of this and also because new SMEs are mushrooming, we increase our range of products and services in this field." The will to found a company is popular among local Emiratis and expats likewise high," said Aqil.

But many entrepreneurs say access to capital, good advice and well-trained staff was still difficult and anti-entrepreneurial. "The existing visa and employment system is very anti-startups and small business," said Mohamed Al-Awadi, founder of restaurant chain Wild Peeta which he closed down at the end of last year, in an interview with Gulf News.

By developing products customized for the SME sector, banks try to lure new business owners and improve their reputation which has suffered so much in recent years in the wake of the global financial crisis. According to Abdulrahman Al-Ghurair, the chairman of the Dubai Chamber of Commerce and Industry, SMEs contribute around 60 percent of the gross domestic product (GDP) in the UAE.

Ecuador approves controversial Communications Law

QUITO, 16 June—Ecuadorian National Assembly approved on Friday with a large majority a controversial Communications Law that seeks to regulate the country's media.

The 127-article law was passed by a 108-26 margin in the parliament after four years of stagnation.

"We are guaranteeing the right to freedom of speech and opinion. We are preventing previous censorship. We are beginning to change the history of communications," said Mauro Andino, the ruling party lawmaker who sponsored the bill.

The right-wing opposition and journalists who consider the law as a "Gag Rule" criticized that the law will allow the government to control media and limit freedom of speech. "This law is a reality because now speech is for all," retorted Gabriela Rivadeneira, president of the National Assembly.

The law was approved with the changes and reviews made in the last days by President Rafael Correa who has said the country needs laws "to sanction the abuses made under the name of freedom of speech."

Under the new law, there will be a redistribution of open-signal radio and television frequencies with 33 percent for public media, 33 percent for private media and 34 percent for community media.

This reduces the share of the private sector in media, which currently controls 85.5 percent of the radio frequencies and 71 percent of the television frequencies, according to the Superintendence of Telecommunications.

The law also gives priority to the national production, bans monopoly on the media, recognizes the rights of journalists and requires that 10 percent of the private advertising received by media will be invested in local or regional media to strengthen them.

Most importantly, the law allows to establish a regulatory body to restrict violent, sexual or discriminatory content and to sanction and fine violators and it also bans "media lynching".

According to the new law, media should refrain from spreading information in an indirect way or by third person, or discrediting a natural or legal person.

Since 2007, when president Correa assumed power, he has had strong disagreements with right-wing private press, which he refers as "factual power, corrupt, profit-seeker and mediocre," due to distorted information on him.—Xinhua

China's mobile game market booms in Q1

BEIJING, 16 June—China's mobile game market reached a value of 2.16 billion yuan (352.3 million US dollars) in the first quarter of 2013, a major tech and Internet information provider has said.

The figure represents a 30.26-percent increase compared with the volume in the last quarter of 2012, according to the results of a seasonal survey released by Analysys International on Friday.

The booming market is largely attributable to the growth of mobile network gaming, gaming which requires an Internet connection.

This has the most potential for driving the overall mobile game market along with the 75.28 million new smartphones sold in the Chinese market in the first quarter of 2013, said Xue Yongfeng, an analyst with the firm.

In the first quarter, mobile network games contributed about 1.14 billion yuan, a 53.17-percent increase compared with the last quarter of 2012, to the whole mobile game market.

Paris Jackson never got over her father's death

Paris Jackson

LOS ANGELES, 16 June —Late pop legend Michael Jackson's daughter Paris, who is in hospital after an alleged suicide attempt, hasn't properly mourned the death of her father, and she is perhaps yet to overcome the tragedy of his death.

If a source is to be believed, one of the reasons behind Paris' cry for help is that she has never properly mourned the passing of her father, who died from acute Propofol intoxication in 2009.

Paris is currently receiving psychological help at UCLA Medical Centre and is said to have developed an obsession with the comments that people leave on social media sites about Michael Jackson, reports femalefirst.co.uk.

A source said that Paris is a "rebel" and she was almost expelled from school after punching a student who "talked smack about her father".

Paris had also come close to her birth mother Debbie Rowe before the incident. It is said that once Paris is discharged from the medical center, the duo will spend six to eight weeks together.—PTI

Japan hammered by Neymar, Brazil in Confederations Cup opener

BRASILIA, 16 June—Japan flunked their first test at the Confederations Cup as Alberto Zaccheroni's side went down 3-0 to two-time defending champions Brazil in the opening match on Saturday.

A cracking third-minute strike by Neymar and second-half goals from Paulinho and Jo easily handed the three points to Luiz Felipe Scolari's side, who will face Mexico on Wednesday. Japan play Italy next at Recife the same day.

Manchester United's Shinji Kagawa tipped his hat to Neymar for the goal, but said Japan did not help themselves with a lackluster performance littered with mistakes.

"We knew the importance of starting the match well, and then that happened," Kagawa said, referring to Neymar's half-volley from outside the box. "But you just have to credit him on that one; no one could have done anything about it."

"Brazil were obviously good. But we had the rare opportunity of playing on a stage like this and we didn't take it. We said this and that about trying to win today, but we didn't even come close to trying."

"This one is a much worse defeat than the one in October," he said of Japan's 4-0 defeat to Brazil in a friendly last year.

Man-of-the-match Neymar was substituted in the 74th minute as an injury precaution, Scolari said.

"Everything's OK, no problem," said Neymar, Barcelona's latest signing. "It was a quick play with Fred controlling the ball beautifully. I was lucky to have scored a fantastic goal."

Added Scolari, "The most important thing today was the result because it takes us a lot closer to the second round."

Selfish players cause big trouble, says Mourinho

LONDON, 16 June—Jose Mourinho has told his players not to act selfishly in his second spell as manager of Chelsea otherwise there will be "big trouble" at Stamford Bridge.

Divisions emerged in the dressing room during the last few months of Mourinho's reign at his previous club Real Madrid and he seems determined to avoid a repeat.

"If you are a top professional, if you are not a selfish person, if you put the club in front of yourself and if you are here to work 100 percent for me, for your fellow players and for the club, we will have a wonderful relationship," he told reporters.

"If you are selfish, if you don't care about the club, don't care about the fans, don't care about the image... we are in big trouble.

"Sometimes you have groups that adapt to this in a very easy way. Sometimes you have groups that this becomes like a doctrine and everything is easy," said Mourinho. "Sometimes you have a couple of guys who are not so keen to accept these kind of rules and this is where you have some problematic relationships."

Mourinho is one of eight Chelsea managers to have been appointed since Russian billionaire Roman Abramovich bought the club in 2003.

The Portuguese's close friend Alex Ferguson, who retired last month following a remarkable 26-year spell as Manchester United boss, once said that a regular turnover of managers gave more power to the players.

"What Sir Alex says in relation to English football is doctrine, it's the bible," said Mourinho.—Reuters

Abramovich never interfered in team affairs - Mourinho

LONDON, 16 June—Jose Mourinho has rejected the notion Roman Abramovich interfered in team affairs in his first spell as Chelsea manager and also denied the Russian owner went over his head to land big-money buy Andriy Shevchenko in 2006.

Mourinho said he was in complete control of all playing matters between 2004-07 and also gave an insight into the behind-the-scenes activity that led to the signing of AC Milan striker Shevchenko for 30 million pounds.

"The owner never, never during my time did he try to interfere in the basic things of the manager," the 50-year-old Portuguese told reporters.

"The basic things are training sessions, team selection, profile of the players you want to bring."

Mourinho, who signed a four-year contract earlier this month to return to Chelsea, said the Shevchenko transfer was a good example of how he and the billionaire owner used to work in tandem in his previous three-and-a-half-year stint at Stamford Bridge.

"We wanted to buy Samuel Eto'o from Barcelona," said the former Real Madrid, Inter Milan and Porto manager. "Why? Because he was the only player I could play with Didier Drogba, changing the system to two strikers."

The boss (Abramovich) did everything to bring Eto'o. In the end Barcelona said 'we don't sell, forget it'.

"After that we went to other options and got to Shevchenko, and I was happy with Shevchenko," Mourinho said.—Reuters

Mickelson with one-shot lead at US Open

ARSMORE, (Pennsylvania), 16 June—Phil Mickelson moved a step closer to one of his biggest goals, a US Open title, as he emerged from a see-saw third round battle at Merion to take a one-shot lead into Sunday's final round.

Mickelson rolled in a nine-foot birdie putt at the 254-yard 17th hole to leapfrog playing partner Luke Donald, who slipped out of the lead with a bogey on the mammoth par-three.

Four-times major winner Mickelson, looking for his first US Open title after finishing runner-up a record five times, bogeyed the daunting 18th hole but still came away with the lead after completing an even-par 70 for a one-under-par 209 total.

"It is a hard challenge, but it is a lot of fun," said

Mickelson, keen for the next step in his quest for a first US Open crown.

"Let's go. I can't wait to get back out playing."

Sunday could be a dream day for Mickelson, who would add a missing line to his impressive resume with an Open victory as he celebrates his 43rd birthday and Father's Day with his dad watching him play at Merion.

"I've had opportunities in years past, and it has been so fun, even though it's been heart breaking to come so close a number of times and let it slide," Mickelson said.—Reuters

Chalk Art under foot as pen shows its appeal in Pasadena California

LOS ANGELES, 16 June —To those over 600 artists, nothing is more exciting than painting on the cement ground of the whole street block with chalk: they are creating their art pieces under foot with imagination and creativity.

More than 600 chalk artists from all over the country came to Pasadena, a city in California where the famous annual New Year Rose Parade takes place, to spend the weekend creating artworks in every imaginable style in the tradition of the Italian "madonnari" street painters.

This year's highlights include "Animation Alley," featuring animators and graphic designers; the new "Chalk of Fame," showcasing chalk versions of famous movie posters at the ArcLight movie theatre; and a mural of Pasadena's hometown baseball legend Jackie Robinson by Tom Matousek, a local artist.

Chalk paintings won't last, and after the two-day festival, they will disappear. But chalk artists do not care. Two days are enough to show their talent and imagination.

In 2010, the chalk painting event in Pasadena was listed in the Guinness Book of World Records as the world's largest public art event of its kind, and this year it is 10 percent larger, according to the event organizer.

Also, the appeal of watching the chalk art taking shape on concrete crosses all boundaries of age and levels of sophistication. Last year, about 100,000 visitors attended the two-day event, and this year, more visitors are expected.

William Zin, who graduated from the California State University, Long Beach with an art degree, was working hard on his chalk painting "Going to the West" on Saturday morning.

Zin said this is his fifth year here, adding that as an immigrant from China, he wants to show Americans the rich Chinese culture with his chalk.

"Visitors would always come to me and ask me what the painting tells, and I would tell them the story I learned when I was a child," Zin said.—Xinhua

Murray tames fired-up Tsonga to reach Queen's final

LONDON, 16 June —Neither a revved up Jo-Wilfried Tsonga nor the awful British weather could prevent Andy Murray reaching a third Queen's Club final on Saturday as the world number two battled back from a set down to win 4-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Local favorite Murray now faces champion Marin Cilic in Sunday's final after the fifth-seeded Croat triumphed 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 against Lleyton Hewitt who was bidding to roll back the years by winning a fifth Queen's title.

After persistent show-ers kept the players off court for most of the day, Britain's twice champion Murray emerged into the evening gloom to find fourth seed Tsonga playing aggressive tennis of the highest caliber.

The US Open champion was outclassed in the opening set and faced two break points in the seventh game of the second as the big-hitting Frenchman tightened the screw.

Murray, however, managed to get a handle on the Tsonga serve that had bamboozled him in the early stages and turned the encounter on its head, quickly gaining the psychological edge to extend his winning run over his opponent to seven matches.

Having missed the French Open with a back injury, Murray is still easing his way back to full fitness and will be pleased to have come through a testing workout against a player who battled to the semi-finals at Roland Garros this month, beating Roger Federer on the way.

"I'm much happier," the Scot told reporters. "I said yesterday you don't always come into this tournament with high expectations because you haven't had that long to prepare and it's always a tough draw here.

"With the situation I was in, this week has gone well. I have had a good win today against a top player and, providing I get some good practice next week and don't take my eye off the ball and just be content, I have had a good week here."

Cilic finally overcame unseeded Australian Hewitt in a match that began on Center Court but was shunted to neighboring Court One when organizers realized there was little hope of finishing both semi-finals on the main arena.

With rain forecast for Sunday, the prospect of a Monday finish is looming but the court switch still frustrated Hewitt.

"It was all weird," he said. "I think the ATP Tour guy panicked under pressure.

"I think he has to take a lot of the blame because there has not been another drop of rain since."

The 32-year-old Hewitt was attempting to become the oldest player to win at Queen's but Cilic proved an awkward opponent.

The Croat's steeping serve bounced high off the skiddy turf, pushing Hewitt out of his comfort zone, and his low slice prevented the veteran attacking with his usual gusto.

Yet after losing the first set, Hewitt scrapped his way back into the match in the second.

While some of the old dynamism has gone, the fiery competitive streak

8-1 losing record to Murray including a straight-sets defeat at Wimbledon last year.

"He plays well here," Murray said. "He's that led the Australian to world number one and two grand slam titles in his heyday was still on show as he frequently queried calls and pointed accusing fingers at linesmen.

Tempers flared in the second set when Cilic felt Hewitt's persistent jibes were beginning to have some influence.

The normally placid Croat shouted 'he's putting pressure on your calls' when umpire James Keothavong overruled a linesman in Hewitt's favor.

Cilic kept his head and then piled on some pressure of his own, racing away with the deciding set.

The fifth seed has an won nine matches in a row and he's beaten some top grasscourt players this week.

"He's one of the top 10 grasscourt players in the world, I would say."
