Japan to lend $160 mil to Cambodia to boost regional connectivity

SENDAI, 15 March — Prime Minister Shinzo Abe told his Cambodian counterpart Hun Sen on Sunday that Japan will extend 19.2 billion yen, or about $160 million, in low-interest loans to Cambodia to improve a major road, a move that would increase transportation capacity and efficiency in the Mekong region.

Together with the opening in April of a Japan-funded bridge in Cambodia spanning the Mekong River, improvement of National Road No 5 that runs between Phnom Penh and the Thai border is expected to boost regional connectivity and stimulate economic development.

In a meeting with Hun Sen in the northeastern Japan city of Sendai, Abe said, “By investing in such high-quality infrastructure, Japan would like to contribute to Cambodia’s efforts to significantly strengthen connectivity with neighbouring countries and achieve sustainable growth,” according to the Japanese Foreign Ministry.

The two leaders hailed the completion of the Tsubasa Bridge, a 2,200-metre suspension bridge in Neak Loeung, southeast of Phnom Penh, that locals say will remove a traffic bottleneck between the Cambodian capital and Ho Chi Minh City in southern Vietnam.

Hun Sen was quoted by the ministry as saying, “The Tsubasa Bridge is an important bridge that connects Mekong countries,” and he “appreciates Japan’s assistance for National Road No 5.”

The road and the bridge, whose name means bird wings in Japanese, are part of the Southern Economic Corridor, a transportation route linking Ho Chi Minh City to Dawei in southeastern Myanmar via Bangkok. Governments and businesses expect it to serve as a major industrial artery in the Mekong region.

the Association of South-east Asian Nations, where barriers to the flow of people, goods and money across the borders of its 10 member states will be lowered when a more integrated ASEAN Economic Community is launched at the end of this year.

In Sunday’s talks,

Abe and Hun Sen affirmed cooperation toward a July 4 summit in Tokyo between Japan and five ASEAN states along the Mekong River, at which the leaders are expected to craft a new strategy for Tokyo to contribute to sustainable development of the Mekong region beyond 2015.

The five Mekong states are Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar, Thailand and Vietnam. The five other ASEAN members are Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore.

Abe and Hun Sen also expressed a mutual desire to begin direct flights between the two countries soon in line with a bilateral aviation agreement signed in January.

Japan inked bilateral aviation pacts with Cambodia and Laos in January to allow airlines to operate regular direct flights between Japan and those two countries. Tokyo now has such accords with all 10 ASEAN member states.

And with the number of Japanese companies investing in Cambodia tripling to about 150 in 2014 from the 2011 level, Abe asked Hun Sen to take additional measures to improve investment conditions in the country.

Among major Japanese investments in Cambodia was the opening in Phnom Penh last June of a large shopping mall by Aeon Co, Japan’s largest operator of general merchandise stores.

On the political front, Abe offered “maximum support” for electoral reform in Cambodia through measures such as the continued dispatch of experts. Hun Sen appreciated Japan’s support and said that in the wake of a recent agreement between the ruling and opposition parties, Cambodia plans to formulate a bill on elections.

Abe requested Cambodia’s participation in an international seminar that Japan will host in June on peace-building, national reconciliation and democratization in Asia.

Hun Sen was visiting Sendai for a UN meeting on disaster risk reduction. Speaking at the start of the five-day meeting Saturday, Abe pledged $4 billion in aid for disaster management measures in developing countries.

Chinese premier says 2015 test for Sino-Japanese relations

BEIJING, 15 March — Chinese Premier Li Ke-qiang on Sunday urged Japan to squarely face its past militarism and said this year, marking the 70th anniversary of the end of World War II, will be a test for bilateral relations.

“The crux of the issue is how the war and that part of history are viewed. We need to take history as a mirror and look to the future,” Li said at a press conference in Beijing to wrap up an annual meeting of the National People’s Congress, the country’s top legislature.

“The war of aggression imposed on the Chinese by the Japanese militarists brought so much suffering. This year will be a test and an opportunity for China-Japan relations,” Li said.

Li said the purpose of a series of events, including a military parade, this year in China to mark the anniversary of the conflict, or what it calls the war against Japanese aggression, is “to bear in mind the lessons of the past and ensure history will not repeat itself.”

Li said he believes bilateral relations and trade will grow further if Japanese political leaders have the same spirit to learn from the past.

During China’s most important public political event of the year, the rubberstamp parliament approved the Communist Party-controlled government’s set of policies for 2015.

Li delivered the major policies at the opening of the meeting on 5 March, which include a target of around 7 percent for economic growth and a plan to increase military spending by 10.1 percent.

This year’s annual parliament session was held at a time when the government is grappling with a slowdown in the economy while, at the same time, trying harder to boost its global influence under President Xi Jinping’s campaign to achieve the “dream of the great rejuvenation of the Chinese nation.”

The slowing growth, as evidenced by the new GDP target — the lowest in 11 years — has been termed as a “new normal” by the Chinese leadership, which is saying the time is ripe for the world’s second-largest economy to transition from the quantity to the quality of development.

BEIJING, 15 March — China is willing to build a new type of major-country relations with the United States featuring no conflict, no confrontation, mutual respect and win-win cooperation, Premier Li Ke-qiang said on Sunday.

Chinese President Xi Jinping's planned US visit in September will inject new impetus into the development of China-US relations, added the premier at a press conference after

Kerry says it is possible to reach an interim deal with Iran

SHARM EL-SHEIKH, 15 March — US Secretary of State John Kerry said on Saturday he hoped "in the next days" it would be possible to reach an interim deal with Iran if Tehran can show that its nuclear power programme is for peaceful purposes only.

Speaking on the eve of fresh talks with Iran in Lausanne, Switzerland, on Sunday, Kerry appeared more upbeat about the possibility of a framework agreement by a deadline at the end of the month. A final accord would then be negotiated by 30 June.

Earlier on Saturday he told a news conference on the sidelines of a conference in the Red Sea resort of Sharm el-Sheikh that it was unclear whether an interim deal was within reach.

A deal would curb Tehran's most sensitive nuclear activities for at least 10 years in exchange for the gradual easing of some sanctions.

"We believe very much that there's not anything that's going to change in April or May or June that suggests that at that time a decision you can't make now will be made then," Kerry told CBS News.

"If it's peaceful, let's get it done. And my hope is that in the next days that will be possible," he added.

The White House is furious about a letter written by 47 Republican senators to Iran last week threatening to undo any Iran deal once US President Barack Obama leaves office.

Kerry has slammed the letter as a "direct interference" in the nuclear negotiations and warned that it could jeopardize efforts to reach a deal.

The letter was written by Tom Cotton, a first-term senator from Arkansas, who has often criticized Obama's foreign policy.

Asked whether he would apologize for the letter when he meets with Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Jawad Zarif on Sunday, Kerry retorted: "Not on your life."

"I'm not going to apologize for an unconstitutional, un-thought out action by somebody who's been in the United States Senate for 60-something days," Kerry said. "That's just inappropriate."

He said he would explain to Iran's negotiators and other world powers involved in the talks that Congress does not have the right to change an executive agreement. "Another president may have a different view about it, but if we do our job correctly, all of these nations, they all have an interest in making sure this is in fact a proven, peaceful programme," he added. — Reuters

UN forum calls for action on climate change to reduce disaster risks

SENDAI, 15 March — Representatives from countries across the world at a UN conference on disaster risk mitigation on Sunday underscored the urgent need of addressing the issue of climate change to reduce the impact of disasters and promote sustainable growth.

At the day's plenary session of the five-day gathering that began on Saturday in the northeastern Japanese city of Sendai, Annick Girardin, minister of state for development and Francophonie from France, said climate change is responsible for more than 80 percent of damage caused by natural hazards.

The UN conference is the first in a series of meetings this year around the globe on development goals and climate change, including the 21st Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change to be held in Paris at the end of the year.

The Sendai conference is "above all a call for lucidity, because it is no longer possible to ignore climate chaos" in the context of disaster risk mitigation, Girar-din said.

The situation will worsen if the international community cannot agree in Paris on a post-2020 regime for reducing greenhouse gas emissions, she added.

The Sendai conference is also seen as a significant opportunity to enhance global solidarity in the run-up to the UN summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda to be held in September in New York.

"Disaster risk reduction must be closely integrated with development," Park In Yong, South Korean minister of public safety and security, told the plenary session.

"For developing countries in particular, a vicious cycle may develop in which disasters roll back years of developmental achievement, leading to a further extension of poverty," he added.

On the sidelines of the plenary meeting, a ministerial session was held to discuss how to rebuild communities better following disasters. Working sessions on various issues, including early warning and evacuation tools for disabled people, are taking place.—Kyodo News

Japan, China agree to keep cooperating over disaster management

SENDAI, 15 March — The Japanese minister in charge of disaster management and her Chinese counterpart agreed on Sunday to continue to cooperate in tackling disasters and reaffirmed a plan to hold a ministerial meeting with South Korea on the issue.

Eriko Yamatani, Japan's minister for disaster management, and China's Civil Affairs Minister Li Liguang said they will boost their countries' disaster prevention work and continue such efforts, a Japanese official said.

It is the first visit to Japan by a Chinese Cabinet member in three years and reflects a Japan-China accord last year under which the two Asian neighbours will make continued efforts to gradually improve bilateral ties. Last November, Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and Chinese President Xi Jinping, who took office in 2012 and 2013, respectively, held their first meeting in Beijing.

Meeting on the sidelines of the UN World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction, Yamatani extended an invitation to Li to attend a disaster management meeting at the ministerial level that Japan will host this year and also invite South Korea, the official said.

In response, Li said it might be difficult for him to attend but Beijing will send an appropriate person, according to the official.

The trilateral ministerial meeting on disaster management has been held every two years since 2009 alternately in one of the three countries. The Yamatani-Li meeting took place as the two countries seek ways to mend their strained bilateral relations over territory disputes and differing views on wartime history.

The meeting was strictly about disaster management, and no other issues such as perception on wartime history were discussed, the official said.

Ferguson activists press ahead, undeterred by latest shooting

FERGUSON, 15 March — As the hunt for suspects in the shooting of two police officers in Ferguson, Missouri, extended into a third day, activists took the first steps on Saturday to force the mayor out of office while residents awaited signs of progress in the investigation.

A group called Organization for Black Struggle (OBS) said it is starting a petition to recall Mayor James Knowles. He is one of the few senior city officials remaining after the police chief, a municipal judge and others resigned following a US Department of Justice report on 4 March depicting a Ferguson police force mired in racial bias.

An uneasy quiet prevailed in the St Louis suburb, in contrast with the mayhem that erupted near midnight on Thursday when gunshots rang out during a protest rally, wounding a pair of officers.

Police arrested two people on Saturday night in neighbouring St Louis when about 70 protesters tried to block a street, a Reuters witness said. They were later released.

The shooting on Thursday sent a fresh jolt of tension through a city that has become a symbol of racial conflict since a black teenager was killed by a white police officer last August and a grand jury returned no criminal charges.

"There has been a lot of outrage here over the past seven months," Montague Simmons, executive director of OBS, explaining why activists were determined to press ahead with their demands. "We feel this could be a moment of transformation where people go from being outraged to being involved."

Knowles, a Republican who was 31 when he was first elected in 2011 in a non-partisan election, said on Friday that it would be up to voters to remove him from the part-time job.

Residents will have 60 days to gather signatures from 15 percent of registered voters in the last mayoral election to prompt a special election, OBS said in the statement.

Steve Moore, owner of the Celebrity Soul Food Restaurant, said that when he moved to his current location, Knowles was one of his first customers, asking if there was anything the city could do to help.

"He's continuing to make changes and if people get behind him and hold him accountable he's a good leader for the city," said Moore. He added that he had lost about 80 percent of his business since the unrest began in August.

Some Ferguson residents said they were growing weary, especially after the latest spasm of violence, despite sympathy for protesters who have been out in force since the killing of 18-year-old Michael Brown.

"It's been emotional here. We all want justice for Mike Brown, but we also have to heal," said Jerome Parker, 26, who lives in the area and works in a store. "I support the protests, but I need to make a living."

Parker also worries about the impact the shooting of the officers will have on the push for reforms in Ferguson. Authorities had nothing new to add to the scant information disclosed about the manhunt for suspects in the police shootings.

A day earlier, St Louis County Police Chief Jon Belmar said investigators had dozens of leads and authorities had "a pretty good idea" where the gunshots had originated, but said no arrests were imminent. He had nothing to say about the kind of gun used, the shooter's motivation and any connection to the protesters.

In Thursday's shooting, a 41-year-old county police officer suffered a shoulder wound and a 32-year-old colleague from a nearby police department sustained a facial wound that left a bullet lodged near his ear. Both were treated and released from hospital.—Reuters

Obama joined Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker, a potential Republican contender for the 2016 presidential election, and Democratic Governor Terry McAuliffe of Virginia for the annual Gridiron dinner, an evening of song and skits making light of major players in US politics. Obama joked that his reputation for being a tech-savvy president had now been eclipsed by his one-time foe Clinton, who has come under fire for using a private email account for her work as the nation's top diplomat.

"If you think about how things have changed since 2008, back then I was the young tech-savvy candidate of the future. Now I'm yesterday's news and Hillary's got a server in her house!" "I am so far behind," he said to laughter.

Walker also had some fun with Clinton's email controversy, tying her to wealthy Wall Street donors. "I even have Hillary's private email," Walker said. "It goes right to her campaign headquarters. You know, it's hillaryclinton@wallstreet.com," he said.

Walker quipped that the joke was written by Democratic Senator Elizabeth Warren, who is known for crusading against Wall Street, and who some Democrats hope will challenge Clinton. Obama, feeling loose with less than two years left in office, noted criticism that he had taken a "selfie" photo in a viral video promoting his health insurance programme, but he turned the tables on Republican senators who sent a letter to Iran warning them against a nuclear deal Obama hopes to secure.

"You don't diminish your office by taking a selfie. You do it by sending a poorly written letter to Iran," Obama said.

Obama also ribbed Vice President Joe Biden for his touchy-feely habits. Biden drew criticism for massaging the shoulders of the wife of incoming Defense Secretary Ash Carter at his swearing-in ceremony. "Joe rubs my shoulders, too," Obama said.

Obama jabbed Walker for dodging a question during a recent trip to London on whether he believed in evolution.

"I absolutely believe in the theory of evolution — when it comes to gay marriage," Obama said to laughter. Obama came out in favor of gay marriage in 2012 after many years of what he described as a personal evolution in his thinking about the subject.

Germany wants Russia to comply with Ukraine peace deal before sanctions eased

FRANKFURT, 15 March — Germany and other countries want European Union leaders to endorse a declaration saying that EU sanctions on Russia will not be eased unless Moscow complies with a Ukraine ceasefire deal, two officials said on Saturday.

EU leaders, who meet in Brussels next Thursday and Friday, will discuss the sanctions imposed on Russia's financial, energy and defence sectors last July over Russia's annexation of Crimea and support for separatists in Ukraine.

The ceasefire deal, which was signed last September in Minsk, called for an end to hostilities between Ukrainian forces and Russian-backed separatists and the withdrawal of heavy weapons from the front line.

"It is the plan to have a political declaration to link sanctions to fulfilment of Minsk," said one of the two officials, who asked not to be named.

Germany and some others EU countries were in favour of such a declaration, the officials said, without giving further details. If EU leaders decide to back this stance, it would effectively extend the sanctions, which expire in July, to the end of the year, as the ceasefire deal requires the restoration of Ukrainian border controls with Russia by year-end.—Reuters

Venezuela stages military exercise to counter US 'threat'

CARACAS, 15 March — Venezuela on Saturday staged a military exercise to counter an alleged US threat, deploying soldiers and partisans across the country to march, man shoulder-fired missiles and defend an oil refinery from a simulated attack.

Socialist President Nicolas Maduro has framed recent US sanctions on seven Venezuelan officials as a bid to topple him, and on Saturday his government mobilized 80,000 soldiers and 20,000 civilians as part of a 10-day military drill.

"The United States has declared Venezuela a threat," said General Vladimir Padrino, Venezuela's defence minister.

"And that means an imminent danger for us, so we have to use the National Bolivarian Armed Forces (FANB) as part of our constitutional mission to guarantee independence and sovereignty."

Opposition leaders labeled the exercise a farce and accused Maduro, increasingly unpopular as a result of an economic crisis, of seeking to distract Venezuelans from long queues for scarce products, sky-high inflation and rampant crime.—Reuters

Exclusion from education has impacts on society

By Myint Win Thein

Every human being has equal opportunities to quality education regardless of sex, ethnic origin, language, religion, nationality, social origin, economic condition, ability and so on, according to many education experts.

This means that even poor or underprivileged children wherever they live also have the same opportunity to quality education as the children of social elites in cities. However, many children drop out of their primary schools, middle schools and high schools and join the workforce to help support their parents or just simply because their parents can no longer afford education for them.

Such tragedies are common even as the government has been building more schools and increasing the education budget to make education available for all children in the country. This suggests that just making schools available to children is not enough to ensure that all children have equal access to quality education and that there are many other barriers and obstacles that exclude children from education.

Most common barriers and obstacles to education include economic conditions, ethnic origin and language. It is time to remove all the barriers and obstacles that prevent some of our children from acquiring the same quality education as the children of social elites since exclusion from education has many undesirable impacts on the society as a whole.

The endless havoc or chaos or pandemonium or mayhem caused by hostility, egocentrism, barbarity, injustice and inequality in human societies

By Tommy Pauk

Man is normally superior to any other creatures on this planet earth. The destiny of the earth and mankind mainly depend on man's conduct and behavior. Man should cherish his mother earth and sustain humanity. The sympathy, love, and compassion or benevolence should prevail in human society. These humane characteristics create the peaceful environment and situations among human beings. The essence of the religious teachings concentrates on loving-kindness indeed. The vast majority of people around the world profess the respective religious faith and they affirm or commit or vow themselves to avoid committing any sinful deeds. The rest are free-thinkers or atheists in human society. We humans wish to enjoy peace and happiness in human society.

Nevertheless, some people do not comply nor practice the religious doctrine and ethical principles. Besides, they violate human rights brutally and cruelly. As a result, injustice and inequality arise in some regions in the world and these situations cause chaos or pandemonium or mayhem and man-made disasters. Apparently, the aforesaid acts or behaviors are derived or originated from the hostility, egocentrism and barbarity. Brazenly, they commit crimes against humanity with intention to gain ridiculous or extreme goals that the civilized people do not accept or agree. The greatest issue in the world is man-made disasters. The natural disasters cause calamities and which are inevitable for humans in the world. However, as for man-made disasters, humans can protect or eliminate or solve the problems and issues of man-made disasters unanimously.

If the people or a person or the society is hostile, the people or a person or the society will have enemies. As we all know, social dealing is compulsory among human beings in any society in the world and international relations are of great importance for international communities to build trust and cooperation. Hostility is a threat to peace. e.g. if a certain leader of country is hostile, it is a threat to a country which does not have good relations with that country. Hostility causes chaos not only in the hostile country but also the in the opposing country. Normally, the hostile leader or country possesses the military power or super power. The aggressive leader of such country tries to dominate the opposing country militarily or politically. Due to the leader's aggression, the countries with peace loving people do not associate with the said country. At the same time, animosity, hatred and abhorrence create violence acts.

The hostile country usually invades militarily weak countries or defenseless countries. The war broke out and the people from the militarily weak country encounter the misery of war. The innocent people lose their homes, lives and their properties. The people from both sides are in chaos terribly. Even then the worsening chaotic situations deteriorate the economy of both countries. On the other hand, when the hostile country is attacked or defeated by superpower countries and their allied countries, its people are in mayhem and the infrastructure is severely damaged or destroyed. The practice or behavior of hostility leads towards total destruction in any society or country. Conspicuously, the globalization makes a certain benefit or better achievement to all global communities. The wise leaders of the respective countries deal with each other wittingly and harmoniously nowadays in the world. The hostility is a fuel which acts to sustain or inflame passion, argument, or other intense emotion. It even incites wars or disasters. The hostile leaders of the countries are responsible for this man-made disaster indeed. They have to pay for their sins or to be punished by peace-loving countries. Therefore, people around the world denounce the acts of hostility and help those who are victims of hostility with humanitarian aids. Hostility turns to hegemony or violence or terrorism viciously. As a result, mayhem or pandemonium or chaos occur utterly. Unfortunately, the innocent and ordinary people become the victims of such man-made disaster. They need protection, humanitarian aids and rehabilitation. They are the preys of the conflicts caused by two hostile countries or hostile leaders. They are the ones who create problems, conflicts and wars deliberately and recklessly. For example, long and endless conflict between Palestine and Israel. This issue is derived from hostilities of both sides. They could not control their aggression and wrath. Both people frequently encounter chaos, fatality and insecurity. They cannot enjoy peace of mind. They are on hostile alert all the time. The frequent attack or missile-strikes or air strike from Israel territory into Palestine territory threatens the Palestinians. As retaliatory actions, the Palestinians kidnap Israelis or Israeli soldiers or fired the missiles into Israel territory. Obviously the violent retaliation is based on hostility.

Actually, the act of hostility does not find means and ways to solve the problem. Thus, it is not possible to make any peace process. No one wishes to visit any war-torn country or hostile country as the country cannot provide a guarantee for the security of the visitors as well as its own citizens there. In the hostile conflict zones, the massacre, bomb blasts, suicide-car bomb-blast and acts of terrorists occur frequently in the capital cities, big and crowded cities. E.g. In Iraq, Syria, Nigeria and Somalia. Thousands of people have been killed vainly in those areas. The fighters among them are so callous that a huge number of innocent people are being killed. Nigeria's Bokoharam and Syria-and-Iraq-based IS, the world's best known and brutal terror or violent extremist groups, commit genocide and homicide brutally and inhumanely. International communities are deeply concerned about these issues and pledge to cooperate in eliminating these terror groups with military might. Therefore, hostility threatens global peace and causes mayhem in the societies concerned.

When there are many egocentric persons in a society, organizing for the unity or solidarity is totally impossible. Consequently, prosperity and progress cannot be generated due to lack of solidarity and unity in that society. The more egocentric persons, the less economic progress results in the society. The egocentric persons never prioritize the common interests of the society concerned. Instead of concentrating on the common interests, the egocentric persons think and do for their own benefits and own interest first. That practice causes tension and conflict within their society. Egocentrism is a disgusting practice or inhumane act which is socially unacceptable. Since man is a social animal, he or she should not seek personal gain and benefit only for him or her. He or she ought to be compulsorily involved with social welfare by any means. He or she must work with other humans for the welfare and prosperity of humanity. Unless the social welfare is progressed, the society will certainly encounter mayhem. Due to the acts and behavior of the egocentric persons, the ordinary or simple people show their displeasure, and later the conflict arises between egocentric persons and the vast majority of people in the society. Maybe those egocentric persons are public officials or administrators who are responsible for serving the public affairs. Egocentrism undermines the socio-economic development for a certain society and eventually the people from that society falls into mayhem. Egocentric persons never consider the common interest and other peoples' need and want in their society. Besides, they usually try to escape from chaos caused by them. Even if the society is in trouble, they selfishly ignore and refuse to take responsibilities. So, the people from society concerned displease the actions done by egocentric persons who are of top public officials. Then tension and devastating conflict happen in that society. Egocentric persons should not be appointed or selected or elected for public administration so that we can protect any conflict leading to mayhem in our society.

Barbarity causes havoc in human societies. The savagely cruel act is wide spread in some region in the world. The extreme ideologies and radicalization make them become barbarians. Some people from the different societies in the world are brainwashed by extreme religious groups systematically. The civilized people were greatly shocked to learn the beheading of humans and burning-a-man-alive to death (A Jordanian jet fighter pilot) by violent extremists known as IS militants and Bokoharam terror groups based in Iraq-Syria border and in Nigeria. They threaten the global peace and challenge the civilized people across the world indeed. The barbaric acts are abominable and callous on earth. They kill the innocent people or different nationalities recklessly and savagely. The havoc or mayhem is immense in those areas. The people around are insecure, unhappy and scared to struggle their daily lives as the devilish acts committed by

Myanmar's real estate market expected to be cool this year: experts

By Khaing Thanda Lwin

YANGON, 15 March—The local property market is expected to be cool this year, but if the trend continues until July, it may boom again in 2016, Daw Moh Moh Aung, secretary of the Myanmar Real Estate Services Association, said Friday.

The market cooling may be linked to the country's political situation, Daw Moh Moh Aung told the Global New Light of Myanmar.

She said apartment rental prices in downtown are normal, with apartments selling in the range between K30 million and K50 million, but the condominium market is still cool.

An agent said, "Apartment selling and rental prices near Pazundaung market in downtown have become a bit high, as contractors eye detached houses and buildings there."

According to the data of Myanmar real estate website House.com.mm, only 18 percent of people searched the site for houses to buy in February.

The property market had boomed over the years. Since then, room, house, land and apartment prices have skyrocketed. Since late 2014, the market has been in decline due to low demand.

Property markets in suburban areas are also seeing excess supply. Real estate experts have advised land owners there should not rely only on sale of their lands, but look to the rental market and other means of earning.

Those experts estimate that the country may see a massive influx of foreign investment into the real estate market if the condominium law comes into effect this year.—GNLM

Diabetes comes under spotlight at health seminar

YANGON, 15 March—Diabetes has come under the spotlight at a health seminar that took place at the Myanmar Medical Association on Saturday, according to participants.

In a bid to take preventive measures to curb the deadly disease, Myanmar Diabetes Association joined KALBE International Company to conduct the health seminar on nutrition advice, with nutritionist Dr Wei Wei Myint giving a talk on medical nutrition therapy, regular medication and physical exercise.

She responded queries raised at the seminar.

A study alarms that the disease has touched 246 million all over the world, causing a death every six seconds, a factor that raises concern over diabetic complications.

According to a survey conducted in Myanmar in 2013, diabetic patients accounted for 6.11% of the whole population. —MNA

"If the study is completed this year, we are going to make the expansions [this year]," Ahmad said as quoted by kompas.com, adding that there was a chance that Pertamina would increase the number of gas stations it planned to build.

"We see a lot of opportunities in Cambodia and Myanmar and the process to get the business permits is easier [than in Indonesia]."

Pertamina will also develop fuel storage facilities in Singapore to help supply fuel in the Malacca Strait area which is, in term of fuel market, dominated by Singapore and Malaysian companies.—GNLM extremists known as neo-barbarians. The horrendous and frightening situations are detrimental to global trade, transportation and tourism as well. This is a global issue and we must eliminate those who commit acts of barbarity and those who support the barbarians with finance and weapons. In addition, international communities must combat or crush the organizations hand to hand so that the pleasant and peaceful human societies may exist firmly in the world.

The endless havoc or chaos or . . .

If a society has no justice and equality, there will be chaos or mayhem in it. Justice is handled by man and man is protected by justice from any unfair behavior, harm or trouble or ill-treatment or chaos or mayhem in human societies. Justice justifies the conflicts or crimes or human affairs who is right or who is wrong and punishes anyone who violate laws or who is above the laws. The bench and bar must be credible so that the general public or innocent people can defend the harm and injure made by perpetrators or culprits. The scoundrels, thugs, perpetrators and culprits must be brought to justice. Otherwise, there can have no equality in that society. Everyone has equal rights before the justice. If the judicial system is corrupt and biased or partial, the vast majority of people will condemn it. Thus, a bitter conflict between the administrators and the ordinary people arises violently. People disgust the partiality of a certain judicial system and do not trust it. In this case, the government concerned is responsible for serious-taking-action against those who commit malpractice in judicial system. Naturally the ordinary people in that society demand the unbiased jurisdiction. Besides, those corrupt judges and jury must be removed from judiciary or bench. Not only lack of rectitude or integrity in the judicial system, but also the inequality among the citizens trigger public rage in some countries. Thus, unfortunately the situation turns to chaos or mayhem or pandemonium within the particular countries. When fairness and justice prevail in a society, there will be no tension, no conflict and no unrest. The general public can enjoy happiness and security in their society peacefully. Eventually that society will certainly prosper and develop its economy. To analyze or infer aforesaid situations and circumstances, we can say these are totally man-made disasters in human societies in the world.

We should understand and know who creates causes and who suffers the bad effects. We do not want to encounter the utter devastation caused by man-made disasters. May justice, humanity and compassion prevail in the human societies forever!!!!

Afghanistan gave CIA money to al-Qaeda for diplomat's ransom

WASHINGTON, 15 March — About $1 million provided by the CIA to a secret Afghan government fund ended up in the hands of al-Qaeda in 2010 when it was used to pay a ransom for an Afghan diplomat, the New York Times reported on Saturday.

Al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden had at first been concerned about the payment, fearing the CIA knew about the money and had tainted it with poison, radiation or a tracking device, the Times said, and suggested it be converted to another currency.

The newspaper said letters about the ransom payment were found in the 2011 raid by US Navy SEALs who killed bin Laden at his compound in Abbottabad, Pakistan. The communications were submitted as evidence in the trial of Abid Naseer, who was convicted this month in New York of supporting terrorism and plotting to bomb a shopping centre in Manchester, England.

The Times said Abdul Khaliq Farahi was the Afghan consul general in Peshawar, Pakistan, when he was kidnapped in 2008 and handed over to al-Qaeda. He was released two years later after Afghanistan paid al-Qaeda $5 million, a fifth of which was CIA money that came from an Afghan government fund that received monthly cash deliveries from the agency, the Times said. The newspaper said an al-Qaeda official wrote bin Laden that the ransom money would be used for weapons, operational needs and payments to families of al-Qaeda fighters held in Afghanistan.

The Times said the cash the CIA delivered to the Afghan presidential palace under President Hamid Karzai was used to buy the support of warlords, legislators and others, as well as expenses for clandestine diplomatic trips and housing for senior officials. Afghan officials told the newspaper the payments have slowed since Ashraf Ghani became president in September. In addition to the al-Qaeda correspondence, the Times said its story was based on conversations with Afghan and Western officials but that the CIA declined to comment.—Reuters

Iraqi Kurds say Islamic State used chlorine gas against them

ARBIL, (Iraq), 15 March — Iraqi Kurdish authorities said on Saturday they had evidence that Islamic State had used chlorine gas as a chemical weapon against their peshmerga fighters in northern Iraq in January.

The Security Council of the semi-autonomous Kurdish region said in a statement to Reuters that the peshmerga had taken soil and clothing samples after an Islamic State car bombing attempt on 23 January.

It said laboratory analysis showed “the samples contained levels of chlorine that suggested the substance was used in weaponized form.” The Kurdish allegation could not be independently confirmed. Chlorine is a choking agent whose use as a chemical weapon dates back to World War One. It is banned under the 1997 Chemical Weapons Convention, which prohibits all use of toxic agents on the battlefield. Peter Sawczak, spokesman for the Dutch-based Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, said: “We have not had a request from Iraq to investigate claims of use of chemical weapons in Iraq, and the OPCW cannot immediately verify the claims.”

Chlorine has been used “systematically” in the civil war in neighbouring Syria, an OPCW fact-finding mission found last year. The OPCW would have to get its own samples to confirm the use of chemical weapons in a member state. The Kurdish statement said the car bombing attempt happened on a highway between Mosul and the Syrian border. A Kurdish security source said that the peshmerga fired a rocket at the car carrying the bomb so there were no casualties, except for the suicide bomber.

About a dozen peshmerga fighters experienced symptoms of nausea, vomiting, dizziness or weakness, the source said.

The statement said the analysis was carried out in a European Union-certified laboratory after the soil and samples were sent by the Kurdish Regional Government to a “partner nation” in the US-led coalition that is fighting Islamic State militants in Iraq and Syria.

The source described the samples as “leftovers from the suicide bomber”, but declined to identify the laboratory. The White House said in a statement it could not confirm the allegations but found them “deeply disturbing” and was monitoring the situation “very closely.”

A US defence official said the use of chlorine as a weapon was a possible sign of “growing desperation due to the pressure being applied by coalition air power and Iraqi ground forces.”

South American nations reject US measures against Venezuela officials

QUITO, 15 March — South American nations on Saturday rejected the US decision to label Venezuela a security threat and sanction seven officials, lending President Nicolas Maduro regional support in the diplomatic dispute with Washington. Foreign Ministers of the twelve-country Union of South American Nations (UNASUR) called for a revocation of the measures, which Maduro has blasted as an attempt to unseat him.

“It constitutes an interventionist threat to sovereignty and the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries,” UNASUR said in a statement from Ecuadorian capital Quito.

The regional backing is further evidence the US action against Venezuela has benefited Maduro, whose popularity has tumbled in hand with a severe economic recession. “Long live the South American nation!,”

Maduro exclaimed in celebration on Saturday night, flanked by members of the military who had just led a defense exercise in the face of an alleged US threat. Venezuela's opposition says Maduro is amplifying the bilateral tensions to distract from shortages of everything from toilet paper to chicken, inflation of around 70 per cent, and sky-high crime.

The leader has revved up his revolutionary rhetoric this week to rally supporters at home and around Latin America. The region remains deeply scarred by Washington's backing of coups during the Cold War and is sensitive to any hints of meddling from the superpower to its north.

Maduro's adversaries, however, accuse fellow Latin American states of turning a blind eye to what they deem human rights violations and a crackdown on dissent in Venezuela.

Twin blasts at churches in Lahore kill 10, wound 55

LAHORE, (Pakistan), 15 March — Bombs outside two churches in the Pakistani city of Lahore killed 10 people and wounded more than 55 during Sunday services, rescue workers said, and witnesses said quick action by a security guard prevented many more deaths.

A Pakistani Taliban splinter group claimed responsibility. The blasts went off minutes apart in a majority Christian suburb of the eastern city. Police said it seemed they targeted two churches, one Catholic and one Protestant, that are very close to each other.

After the blasts, enraged resident lynched two suspects, police said.

“I was sitting at a shop near the church when a blast jolted the area. I rushed towards the spot and saw the security guard scuffle with a man who was trying to enter the church, after failing, he blew himself up,” said witness Amir Masih. “I saw his body parts flying through the air.” The guard died as well, he said. It was not clear if the first blast was also triggered by a suicide bomber, Masih said. At least 10 people were killed and 55 wounded, said Khawaja Rafiq, the health adviser to the provincial chief minister. “The rescue operation is still underway and the death toll may increase,” rescue services spokesman Sajjad Hussain said. Taleban faction Jamaat-ul-Ahrar claimed responsibility.

Following the blast, enraged residents lynched two men they suspected of involvement, a police official said. Journalist Riaz Ahmed said he had seen the two burnt bodies at an intersection. Militants in Pakistan have attacked Christians and other religious minorities often over the last decade or more. Many blame the government for doing little to protect them. Pakistan's police are notoriously poorly trained and under funded.

Lahore is the capital of Punjab, Pakistan's wealthiest and most populous province and the political heartland of Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif. The city is generally considered peaceful compared with many other areas of Pakistan, but violence there has been increasing after the government's failed attempts to hold peace talks with the Taliban last year. After the talks failed, the military launched an offensive in the remote north-western region of North Waziristan along the Afghan border to push the Taliban from the last major region they controlled. The military now holds the major urban centres there, but residents say many militants fled before the offensive began and others remain in rural areas.

Blackberry launches new secure tablet

The BlackBerry sign is pictured in Waterloo on 19 June, 2014.—REUTERS

WATERLOO, (Canada), 15 March — Seeking to extend its range of secure mobile devices, BlackBerry Ltd (BB.TO) said on Saturday it was launching a high-security tablet, developed with International Business Machines Corp (IBM.N) and Samsung Electronics Co Ltd (005930.KS).

The SecuTABLET, based on Samsung's Galaxy Tab S 10.5 and being presented by BlackBerry unit Secusmart at tech fair CeBIT 2015 in Germany, reflects the Canadian company's stress on secure connections for governments and businesses as it seeks to preserve a niche market after a drubbing in recent years at the hands of emerging smartphone makers such as Apple Inc (AAPL.O).

"Security is ingrained in every part of BlackBerry's portfolio, which includes voice and data encryption solutions," said Dr Hans-Christoph Quelle, chief executive officer of Secusmart GmbH, in a statement on the new device.

The device was undergoing certification by the German Federal Office for Information Security for secure rating, the statement said, adding that the new tablet used the same security technology as the Secusmart Security Card.

"Working alongside IBM and Samsung, we have added the last link in the chain of the Federal Security Network. Subject to certification of the SecuTABLET, German government agencies will have a new way to access BlackBerry's most secure and complete communications network in the world," Quelle said.—Reuters

Ancient teeth reveal early human entry into rainforests

WASHINGTON, 15 March — People adapted to living in tropical rainforests thousands of years earlier than previously known, according to scientists who found crucial evidence in 20,000-year-old fossilized human teeth discovered in Sri Lanka.

The researchers said there has been a debate over when our species first began living in rainforests, with some experts arguing such habitats may have been too daunting for early human hunter-gathers.

In a study published on Thursday in the journal Science, the scientists examined teeth from 26 people found at various archaeological sites in Sri Lanka for evidence of whether their diet consisted of rainforest plants and animals.

They obtained small tooth enamel samples using a diamond-tipped drill and analyzed them with an instrument called a mass spectrometer.

Almost all the teeth, including the oldest ones from about 20,000 years ago found at the Batadomba-lena rock-shelter in southwestern Sri Lanka, indicated a diet primarily of food from the rainforest.

"Humans have been manipulating and living within dynamic rainforest environments for at least 20,000 years and probably even longer," said University of Oxford archaeologist Patrick Roberts, who studies early human adaptations.

"The lifestyle, as we can see, was dedicated rainforest subsistence," Roberts added.

Scientists previously had not found direct evidence of human occupation of rainforest regions before about 10,000 years ago.

Compared to open habitats, rainforests present difficulties such as dense vegetation that makes it tough to get around, small, nimble and often arboreal prey animals and a bewildering array of plants and fruit, including poisonous ones.

"However, it is clear that hunting and gathering communities in Sri Lanka figured out how to adapt to such settings," said Oxford archaeologist Mike Petraglia, another of the researchers.

The researchers said these people hunted monkeys, giant squirrels, mouse deer, porcupines and other mammals, as well as freshwater and forest snails, while also eating nuts and starchy rainforest plants.

"These results further the picture that our species was incredibly adaptive, and it is arguably this that made us the first species to expand across the diversity of the globe's ecologies and environments," Roberts said.

While the study provides the earliest direct evidence for human reliance on rainforest resources, the researchers said other evidence suggests people may have taken to Sri Lanka's rainforests as early as 38,000 years ago.

Roberts said archaeological work in Africa, Southeast Asia and Melanesia also suggests humans may have used rainforest resources at least 45,000 years ago.

The NYC Regional Competition features three robotics programmes — designed for three age groups from 6 to 19 years old students. It is hosted by NYC FIRST, the local nonprofit affiliate of FIRST, an international nonprofit that inspires students to get involved in science and technology and prepare them for jobs of the future.

The NYC tournament will include a series of competitions, expos, and career fairs, with participation of 2,500 students to battle with their custom-built robots, as high school students compete in a three-on-three sports-style tournament, and elementary and middle-school students put their robots to the test against designated challenges.

The three-day event is the last stop before the FIRST World Championship Tournament to be held in St Louis, the US state of Missouri, in April. Winners from this weekend's competition will move on, but not without putting up a tough fight against their peers.

"These students have worked so hard to get to where they are, from researching real-world programs to designing new inventions through robotics and using the engineering skills they've acquired," said Pat Daly, executive director of NYC FIRST.

In addition to students from three states of New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, international students from Britain, Brazil, Turkey, and China will also be participating.

Li Yangge, a member with the robotic club with Wuhan Foreign Language School, central China's Hubei Province, is among Chinese students to take part in this year's robotics competition in NYC tournament.

"We're confident and passionate to take part in this event," said Li. "It provides us with a good opportunity to enjoy the thrill of hands-on robotics, research, teamwork and inquiry-based problem solving in order to spark a lifelong passion for science and technology."

US ambassador attack renews focus on contentious South Korean security law

SEOUL, 15 March — Efforts by South Korean police to charge a nationalist over a knife attack on the US ambassador have renewed debate about the use of a state security act as a political weapon and an attempt to gloss over security shortcomings.

Kim Ki-jong, 55, could face charges including attempted murder over the 5 March attack as well as violating the National Security Act, a 67-year-old statute that critics say has long outlived its purpose.

Many contend it is used by conservative governments to gag liberal political opponents by painting them as supporters of North Korea, with whom South Korea technically remains at war.

Kim, who has a long history of violent protest, made seven trips to North Korea between 1999 and 2007. Police seized literature at his home they described as “beneficial to the enemy” as part of their investigations.

he said there are no leaders in the South comparable to Kim Il Sung,” Kim Cheol-joon, a police official leading the investigation, told a briefing on Friday, referring to the North Korean state founder.

Critics say trying to charge Kim under the security law politicises the case and attempts to distract from possible shortcomings by police. US Ambassador Mark Lippert was slashed in the face, a wound requiring 80 stitches, while he attended a forum on Korean reunification at a government theatre across the street from the heavily guarded US embassy.

The attack shocked Koreans but quickly turned into a highly charged debate that highlights an ideological divide between conservatives and liberals in South Korea over the reclusive and impoverished North.

President Park Geun-hye and the conservative party’s leader labelled the case an attack against South

US ambassador to South Korea Mark Lippert waves as he leaves a hospital in Seoul on 10 March, 2015.

Korea’s alliance with the United States. Lippert’s face was slashed days after annual US-South Korean military drills began, exercises the North routinely calls preparation for war.

Under the National Security Law, first enacted in 1948 and last revised in 2012, possessing literature supporting entities that threaten state security is subject to prosecution and two or more years in jail. North Korea is considered such an entity.

“The clause on praising and encouraging anti-state entities is the most problematic, and the most politically abused one,” said political analyst Yu Chang-seon, referring to the part of the statute that the police want to apply to Kim.

Kim has yet to be charged formally under the security law but police have been focusing on his possible links to North Korea.

“The Lippert attack has turned into a security crackdown,” said Lee Kwang-cheol, a defence attorney and a member of the liberal group Lawyers for a Democratic Society.

“This is being handled as a political case and (politicians) are giving some kind of guideline to the police,” Lee said.

The attack on Lippert is the latest in a string of recent applications of the National Security law.

In December, the Supreme Court upheld a sedition conviction against a former parliamentarian and member of a party already outlawed for pro-North activities.

Authorities deported in January a South Korean-born American who had spoken positively of life in North Korea, and jailed another woman who joined her in giving speeches. President Park said at the time the security law was needed because North and South Korea remained at war.

In 2004, the then-ruling liberal party and the conservative opposition, led by Park, agreed to remove the problematic clause about praising and encouraging non-state entities to make the security law less politically subjective. The revision, however, failed when hardline liberals insisted the law be abolished altogether.

“Today the atmosphere is completely different, so that nobody can even mention the idea of revising this law, let alone abolishing it,” said analyst Yu.

On Monday, a large crowd of older men in military uniforms held a rally two blocks from where Lippert was attacked, calling for authorities to weed out pro-North factions, derisively called “jong-buk”.

“The National Security Law is the right law to ensure the continued existence of this country,” said Park Tae-young, 67.

“I think it should be strengthened.”—Reuters

Probe launched into cause, responsibility for chopper crash

BELGRADE, 15 March — Two commissions have been set up to determine the causes of and the responsibility for the crash of a military helicopter that killed seven people, the Serbian Armed Forces Chief of Staff, General Ljubisa Dikovic, said on Saturday.

The helicopter was flying into Belgrade from Novi Pazar late Friday, carrying a five-day-old baby whose life was in danger due to respiratory problems.

Initially, an attempt was made to rescue the newborn with an ambulance vehicle, which became trapped on a road due to a rockslide, after which the Serbian Armed Forces sent a Mi 17 helicopter to the rescue operation.

Speaking at a press conference at Dom Vojske, Brigadier General Predrag

Bandic said that the meteorological situation was complex — but not unfavourable — when he gave the order to go ahead with the operation.

The weather worsened abruptly over the Belgrade municipality of Mladenovac, visibility was low and the crew made two unsuccessful attempts to land at the Nikola Tesla Airport, and all contact with the crew was lost at 22.31 pm.

General Dikovic said that the aircraft was found at 2 am on Saturday and noted that he and his aides feel personally responsible for the tragedy.

The extent of everyone’s responsibility needs to be established by 18 March, with the cause of the crash to be determined by 30 March, he said.

Rescue effort begins in Vanuatu after powerful Pacific cyclone

SYDNEY, 15 March — Rescue workers began a massive relief operation in Vanuatu on Sunday following a devastating cyclone that killed at least six people, sent thousands into emergency shelters and disrupted communications in the Pacific island nation.

A nine-member UN team was due to arrive on Sunday to carry out an initial assessment of the damage from the category 5 cyclone named Pam, which at its peak covered the entire country on satellite maps and brought houses crashing down with winds of more than 300 kilometres per hour (185 miles per hour).

Several other neighbouring countries also were affected.

Officials said the airport in Vanuatu’s capital, Port Vila, remained closed, though they hoped it might partly reopen later on Sunday to allow in the first relief planes.

As Cyclone Pam finally moved off to the southeast, more people left homeless by the disaster flooded into evacuation centres filled with thousands of evacuees, government officials said.

Fears remained high that outlying islands, where there are few support services, may have been especially hard hit by flash flooding and cyclone-related damage. Officials said they were still unable to contact any region outside the capital.

“Our communication link is still down,” Paolo Malatu, an official at the country’s National Disaster Management Office (NDMO), told Reuters. “We have not got any information from outside Port Vila.”

“The biggest need at the moment is shelter and food and wash kits,” Malatu said.

With President Baldwin Lonsdale at a conference in Japan and unable to fly into Vanuatu, the government was being led temporarily by Charlot Salwai, acting minister for climate change, government officials said.

Officials on Sunday confirmed six fatalities, a toll that is expected to increase amid unconfirmed reports of dozens of dead in the nation’s remote northeast region. At least 20 others were injured.

“We anticipate that (death toll) will go higher, particularly as information comes from the remote islands. We are talking about islands that are remote and really small, with none of what we would call modern infrastructure,” said Colin Collett van Rooyen, Oxfam’s country manager in Vanuatu.

He added that the government had declared a state of emergency for Shefa province, where Port Vila is located, adding that he anticipated it would eventually be extended to the entire nation.

Formerly known as the New Hebrides, Vanuatu is a collection of around 83 islands with a population of 260,000. It experiences frequent earthquakes and storms, and aid officials regard it as one of the world’s poorest nations.

Aid agencies in nearby Australia and New Zealand were preparing to send help.

Up to 51 dead after bus crash in southern Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO, 15 March — As many as 51 people died on Saturday when a passenger bus drove off a cliff in the southern Brazilian state of Santa Catarina, police said.

The bus, en route from the neighbouring state of Parana, swerved off a curve and fell dozens of metres before crashing in a wooded area. Rescue crews were still trying to rescue survivors and recover the bodies of the victims late in the day.

Initially, police had reported 32 killed, but later said recovery crews believed an additional 19 were dead. Police did not know how many passengers in all were aboard the bus or whether the driver was one of the victims, but said that at least six survivors were being treated for injuries.

The bus was about 10 km (6 miles) from its destination in the city of Joinville when it crashed. Highway and weather conditions at the time were good, a police spokesman said.

Though no immediate cause for the crash had been determined, police said it appeared the brakes on the bus failed.

Brazil has some of Latin America's deadliest roads.

Despite nearly a decade of sustained economic growth that only slowed in recent years, the country has done little to improve or expand its creaky infrastructure.

The country averages more than 18 highway deaths per 100,000 people per year, compared with only about 10 in high-income countries, according to a report by the Inter-American Development Bank. The tolls in nearby Argentina, Colombia and Chile average only about 13.—Reuters

Chinese province imports saline tolerant plant to improve environment

SHIJIAZHUANG, 15 March — North China's Hebei Province has imported a saline tolerant plant in a move to better use its large areas of alkaline land, authorities said on Sunday.

Cangzhou City has ordered Szarvasi 1, a grass used in power production, from Hungary, which can be planted on saline and alkaline land, the local bureau of foreign experts affairs said.

Cangzhou has nearly 3.8 million mu (about 250,000 hectares) of saline and alkaline land in the city's eastern regions. They are left uncultivated since trees planted on it only live two to three years at most.

"Cangzhou City and Hungary are at a similar latitude, so the grass can grow well in the city," said Yang Qingrong, head of the bureau.

Yang said the city's academy of agricultural sciences has signed an agreement with a Hungarian company to import such grass in a move to restore local vegetation, improve regional ecosystem and economy.

The grass proved to grow well in the city's saline and alkaline land after two years of trial, he said, adding that it can be used to feed cows and goats, replace coal as a renewable fuel, and work as additive in paper making and chemical engineering.

Wang Lijing, a staff of Beijing Branch with Corvinus University of Budapest, said the grass can improve soil conditions and ease air pollution.

Szarvasi 1 is a fast-growing, high yield and low cost plant that can adapt well to different environments.

Airliner lands safely in Denver after blowing tire on takeoff

DENVER, 15 March — A United Airlines turbo-prop plane landed safely after it returned to Denver International Airport on Saturday when the Kansas City-bound flight blew a tire on takeoff, officials said.

United Express Flight 4870 reported the mishap as it took off from Denver about 10:30 am MDT,

Andy Samberg to host Primetime Emmys

LOS ANGELES, 15 March — Comedian and 'Brooklyn Nine-Nine' star Andy Samberg will be the host of the 67th Primetime Emmys in September.

The 67th annual edition of the awards ceremony will be broadcast on Fox on 20 September, live from the Nokia Theatre in Los Angeles, reported Variety.

Bruce Rosenblum, chairman and CEO of the Television Academy, reacted to the news by saying, "It is wonderfully fitting that we have Andy Samberg, an Emmy Award winner himself, as our host for this year's Primetime Emmy Awards, his humour, insights and charisma will be an exciting addition to our annual celebration of television's best and brightest."

Samberg was recently a part of the Oscars performance of "The Lego Movie" theme song "Everything Is Awesome". It was widely acknowledged as one of the few highlights of a mostly dull Oscars night, so perhaps it was this that clinched the decision for the Emmys to appoint Samberg.

Reacting to his appointment as the host, Samberg said: "Buckle your seat belts, Emmy viewers! Like, in general,

Comedian and 'Brooklyn Nine-Nine' star Andy Samberg

Barca march four points clear at the top

MADRID, 15 March — Barcelona ensured they will be at least a point clear of Real Madrid at the top of La Liga when they host their arch rivals in next weekend's 'Clasico' after Lionel Messi struck twice in a 2-0 win at Basque minnows Eibar on Saturday.

Barca leapfrogged stuttering Real, who host Levante on Sunday, into first place last weekend and produced another dominant performance inspired by the talismanic Messi to move on to 65 points with 11 games left.

With Xavi and Andres Iniesta on the bench, Messi captained the side and put the Catalan giants ahead in the 31st minute at Eibar's Ipurua stadium when he converted a penalty after Borja Ekiza handled the Argentina forward's shot.

Messi made it 2-0 with a rare header from an Ivan Rakitic corner 10 minutes into the second half, his 32nd La Liga goal of the campaign and his 43rd in all competitions, two more than he managed in the whole of an injury-disrupted 2013-14.

Two goals clear of Real's Cristiano Ronaldo as La Liga's leading marksman this term, Messi has scored at least twice in 120 matches for club and country, 112 for Barcelona and eight for Argentina.

To their credit, Eibar, playing in La Liga for the first time this season, refused to capitulate to their illustrious visitors and forward Federico Piovaccari struck a shot against the crossbar late on.

"It was a very good, solid performance against a team that caused us a lot of problems," Barca coach Luis Enrique told a news conference.

"We will go into the game (against Real) as leaders and in perfect shape."

Messi's scintillating recent form bodes well for Wednesday's Champions League last 16 return match at home to Manchester City when Barca will defend a 2-1 lead from last month's first leg.

Barca's game at Eibar was also noteworthy for midfielder Xavi making a club record-extending 750th appearance when he came on as a second-half substitute for Rakitic.

La Liga champions Atletico Madrid, by contrast, are struggling for goals before last season's beaten finalists seek to overturn a 1-0 deficit against Bayer Leverkusen in Europe's elite club competition on Tuesday.

Atletico surrendered third place in La Liga to Valencia when they had Miranda sent off for a brutal challenge in first-half added time and were held to a 0-0 draw at mid-table Espanyol.

The Madrid side had the better chances at the Cornella-El Prat stadium in Barcelona before centre back Miranda was shown a straight red card when he felled Abraham with an arm as the pair jumped for a bouncing ball.

Forward Fernando Torres had forced a fine save from Espanyol goalkeeper Kiko Casilla in the 11th minute and midfielder Koke fired narrowly wide a minute later. —Reuters

By George! City are beaten by battling Burnley

LONDON, 15 March — Manchester City's faltering attempts to retain their title suffered a huge blow on Saturday when they lost 1-0 at Burnley, giving Chelsea the chance to open an eight-point lead when they host Southampton on Sunday.

Second-placed City have now won only three of their last nine Premier League matches and remain five points behind Chelsea who now have two games in hand.

George Boyd scored the only goal after 61 minutes with a superbly-controlled half-volley from 20 metres that not only dented City's title hopes but also helped Burnley's chances of avoiding relegation.

Chelsea have 63 points from 27 games, City have 58 from 29 while Arsenal, who beat West Ham United 3-0 at the Emirates, are a point behind on 57.

At the other end of the table Burnley are still in the bottom three but have moved on to 25 points, one behind 17th-placed Sunderland who lost 4-0 at home to Aston Villa.

Burnley manager Sean Dyche told Sky Sports: "Our will and desire to be in the Premier League is all on show but we won't get too carried away."

"We know there's a long way to go — the players are grounded. We haven't been broken from defeat — we've been dented a few times — but this win reinforces our confidence and belief."

City manager Manuel

Pellegrini said things are not right with his team because they are not winning.

"It was a normal performance and I don't think we played very badly," he added. "We created more chances, they had one shot on target and got a beautiful goal."

"We didn't create enough to score but we were very unlucky. Of course we're doing something wrong as we are not winning the games we normally do."

"I don't want to focus on two or three players. We are a team, a squad of 22 players, and I'm sure they're giving the most they can. It's important to continue trusting what they are doing."

While City have gone off the boil, Villa have come to life and their revival under new manager Tim Sherwood produced the day's other eye-catching performance.

The 4-0 romp boosted Villa's hopes of avoiding the drop while turning up the heat on Sunderland boss Gus Poyet.

The visitors scored all four goals before halftime with Gabriel Agbonlahor and Christian Benteke netting twice to give Sherwood bragging rights over his former Tottenham Hotspur team mate Poyet.

The Sunderland boss was grim-faced at the final whistle, staring out at a half-deserted stadium following the exits of thousands of home fans long before the end.

"We are delighted to get four goals in one game and for the strikers who have come under a little bit of criticism this year," said Sherwood who took over last month following the sacking of Paul Lambert.

"We had the game won at halftime so it was important we didn't give it away. There's still a long way to go but we're dragging people in with us."

Arsenal tightened their grip on a top-four spot, continuing an impressive run of form with goals from Olivier Giroud, Aaron Ramsey and Mathieu Flamini sinking West Ham. Leicester City remained bottom after a 0-0 draw against Hull City, who had Tom Huddlestone sent off in the second half, while Queens Park Rangers are four points from safety after a dismal 3-1 defeat at Crystal Palace.

The only bright spot for QPR, who have now lost 13 of their 14 away games, was a contender for goal of the season from Matt Phillips who scored with a 45-metre shot late in the game. In the day's other match West Bromwich Albion beat Stoke City 1-0 at The Hawthorns.—Reuters

Arsenal give Wenger hope of overturning Monaco deficit

Arsenal manager Arsene Wenger

LONDON, 15 March — Arsene Wenger believes Arsenal can overturn their Champions League deficit against Monaco after having watched his side's free-flowing 3-0 victory over West Ham United on Saturday.

The Londoners will again need to be at their attacking best in the French principality on Tuesday after Monaco bullied their way to a 3-1 win in last month's last-16 first leg tie.

"We have a massive challenge but we will give absolutely everything to try and go through," manager Wenger told Sky Sports television.

"(A poor pitch) is one of the problems, there is a lot of rain down there and when it rains, it rains. It's not absolutely fantastic but we won't have any excuses, they are favourites now but we can reverse it."

"We just have to make sure the spirit, the belief and the desire is there."

Arsenal, in third spot and hoping to qualify for the Champions League next season for the 16th successive campaign, have a four-point lead over fourth-placed Manchester United who host Tottenham Hotspur at Old Trafford on Sunday.

Goals from Olivier Giroud, Aaron Ramsey and Mathieu Flamini against West Ham earned Wenger's men an eighth straight home league win for the first time since they moved to the Emirates in 2006.

After knocking Manchester United out of the FA Cup on Monday, victory for Arsenal capped a fine week for Wenger and the Frenchman was pleased with their attacking swagger.

"It was a good performance, we were weaker at the start of the second half but overall we kept going and created many chances," he said.

"It was a convincing win and a very important one as well. That's the kind of game we want to play. When it doesn't work it is questioned but that is the game we love."—Reuters
