

President U Thein Sein accepts golden rice award for promoting rice production

NAY PYI TAW, 20 May— President U Thein Sein received golden rice award from the International Rice Research Institute Wednesday at a ceremony coinciding with the launch of Myanmar's strategic plan on the development of rice production.

The dual ceremony was held at Agriculture Research Department in Nay Pyi Taw, and was attended by Vice President U Nyan Tun, union ministers, deputy ministers, officials from the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation, UN agencies, international agencies, NGOs, Director General Dr Robert Stewart Zeigler of IRRI and guests.

At the first session of the ceremony, Dr Zeigler conferred the award to President U Thein Sein for his guidelines on promotion of rice cultivation.

The president then made opening remarks for the second session, saying the sufficiency of food and

Low pressure persists over Bay of Bengal

By Aye Min Soe

YANGON, 20 May — A low-pressure zone is persisting over the East Central Bay and adjoining Southeast Bay of Bengal, the Department of Meteorology and Hydrology said Wednesday.

Strong monsoon conditions are present in the Andaman Sea and Southeast Bay, while the weather is partly cloudy to cloudy elsewhere in the Bay of Bengal.

The government weather bureau forecast for Wednesday predicts rain or thundershowers to be isolated in Upper Sagaing Region and Kachin State and scattered in Lower Sagaing and Magway regions, as well as Shan and Chin states.

Rain or thundershowers are predicted to be fairly widespread in Mandalay Region, as well as Rakhine and Kayah states, and widespread in the remaining regions and states.

Yangon, Ayeyawady and Taninthayi regions, as well as Rakhine and Mon States, are forecast to receive heavy falls with an 80 percent degree of certainty.

The forecast also predicts occasional squalls with rough seas offshore and along Myanmar's coasts. Surface wind speed in squalls may reach 40 miles per hour.

The southwest monsoon has already entered the southern part of the country and is currently advancing into the deltaic areas, the forecast said.

Isolated rain or thundershowers are expected Thursday over Nay Pyi Taw and Mandalay, and one or two rain or thundershowers are expected over Yangon and neighboring areas, with 100 percent degree of certainty.

Operators of Yangon's first taxi call service aim to launch service soon

By Ye Myint

YANGON, 20 May— The founders of Yangon's first taxi call service presented their business plan Wednesday to more than 1,500 people including cab drivers and owners at the Union of Myanmar Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry building in Yangon.

The Taxi Call Centre expects to launch soon with a fleet of 1,500 call cabs in the commercial capital.

The founders— an entrepreneur, a famous private teacher and well-known movie star Wai Lu Kyaw—invited taxi operators and drivers to join the service and said business partnership with the centre presented numerous benefits.

"The centre will provide its taxi users with the services of safety and convenience," said Ko Win Swe Oo, one of the founders, adding that the TCC will help alleviate the city's busy traffic situation and reduce fuel consumption could be reduced, as its call taxis will remain stationary when they are not carrying passengers.

For taxi owners who rent their cabs out to the centre, they will be provided with maintenance and insurance for their cars under the management of the centre.

The centre will run its call taxi service with hire cars, offering K300,000 per month, and recruit drivers with at least three-years' experience, paying a monthly salary of K180,000-350,000.

The centre's operators said taxi drivers currently earn much less than K10,000 a day, excluding fuel cost and rent paid to the owners, while driver-cum-owners earns less than K20,000 a day, excluding fuel cost, inviting them to sign up with the centre.

Yangon is believed to have more than 50,000 taxis on the road in 30 townships. — GNLM

Coal fired power plant projects to go ahead

NAY PYI TAW, 20 May — Coal fired power plant projects will not be cancelled as electricity consumption in Myanmar is increasing by 13 to 15 percent annually, said Deputy Minister for Electric Power U Aung Than Oo to Pyithu Hluttaw session on Wednesday.

MP Daw Tin Tin Yi

from Kyunsu constituency asked the government's plan whether the coal fired projects would be cancelled amidst the protest of local people.

Myanmar has 43 power stations with installation capacity of 4,987 MW generated 69 percent from hydropower, 29 percent from natural gas and 2 percent from coal, while only 30 percent of households across the country get electricity.

The deputy minister said Myanmar needs to construct more power plants to be able to generate 23,594 MW in 2030-2031 to distribute electricity the whole country.

Regarding query of Myanaung constituency's Pyithu Hluttaw MP U Aung Sein about electricity distribution to Myanaung township from national grid, U Aung Than Oo said preliminary surveys are being carried out to construct a 33-KV power station by using bio-fuel and wind powers alternatively.

He added that the project will be implemented depending on budget allocation and low-interest from local or foreign loans.

Myanaung township is about five nautical miles from nearest Yanbye Township.

Deputy Minister for Labour, Employment and Social Security U Htin Aung replied to the query of Kanpetlet constituency MP Thura U Aung Ko whether Myanmar seafarers could join shipping companies in Taipei (China).

U Htin Aung said Myanmar sailor associations can also practice similar trend like the Myanmar Seafarers Federation.

Vietnamese National Assembly's 13th tenure convenes for 9th session

The ninth session of the 13th tenure of Vietnam's National Assembly is opened in Hanoi on 20 May, 2015. The session, to last till 26 June, is expected to review and adopt 11 law bills and have the first reading for other 15 bills. —XINHUA

HANOI, 20 May — The ninth session of the 13th tenure of Vietnam's National Assembly (NA) convened in capital Hanoi on Wednesday, with a focus on law building and decision for key socio-economic issues.

Speaking at the opening ceremony, Nguyen Sinh Hung, NA chairman said the ninth session is taking place amid complicated world political and harsh global economic situation while Vietnam is facing new opportunities and challenges.

The session is of great importance for Vietnam to review the country's current situation in socio-economics, defence, security, foreign affairs, and justice among others, said Hung.

At the session, Vietnam will also determine what to do immediately to fulfill socio-economic targets in 2015 set by the NA.

During the ongoing session, the NA will review and pass 11 law bills as well as give comments on other law bills, said Hung.

In addition, the NA will review the government's reports on supplement evaluation to result of the implementation of the 2014 socio-economic development plan and state budget as well as the implementation of those in the first months of 2015, according to the NA chairman.

Another content that will be reviewed and decided during the session is the policy to invest in Vietnam's southern Long Thanh International Airport.

This is an important project to Vietnam's southern economic region as well as to the whole country, with impacts on various sectors and areas, as well as draws great attention of local voters, said Hung.

The NA chairman added that investment phases and effectiveness of the project should be well calculated to ensure feasibility and possibility of investment mobilization, and make sure the project is in line with Vietnam's aviation development.

The ninth session of the 13th tenure of Vietnam's NA is expected to last till 26 June.

Abe becomes 6th longest-serving prime minister in postwar Japan

TOKYO, 20 May — Prime Minister Shinzo Abe became the sixth longest-serving prime minister in postwar Japan on Wednesday, surpassing the tenure of his grandfather and former Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi with 1,242 days in office.

"I have a long way to go. What is important is not the number of days in office but what I have achieved," he told reporters at the prime minister's office. "I will devote myself to tackling our policies." After first becoming prime minister in September 2006, Abe abruptly stepped down in September 2007 due to what he later described as an intestinal disease. The leader of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party began his second term in December 2012, and his tenure includes the 366 days he spent as prime minister during his first term.

Two killed by Abu Sayyaf men in S Philippines

MANILA, 20 May — Two civilians were killed and another was wounded when they were fired upon by Abu Sayyaf terrorists off the waters of Maimbung town in Sulu Province of southern Philippines on Tuesday afternoon, a military commander reported on Wednesday.

Col Allan Arrojado, chief of the Joint Task Group Sulu, said the victims were aboard a motorized boat, cruising between the seaways of Tiomabal island in Maimbung town and Tapul town, around 3 pm when they were fired upon by Abu Sayyaf men aboard another boat. Arrojado said, the victims were attacked "without any apparent reason."

Arrojado said the Abu Sayyaf men may be trying to avenge the death of their five comrades during the failed kidnapping of businesswoman Guan Kim Mau-jon last 6 May in Laminusa island. The 400-strong Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG), founded in the early 1990s by Islamic extremists, is a violent Muslim terrorist group operating in the southern Philippines. With nuclear deal in sight, Iran drives harder bargain in Indian trade talks

NEW DELHI, 20 May — Iranian trade negotiators have become more assertive with Indian counterparts as hopes rise of international sanctions on Teheran easing later this year, sources said, and Indian companies fear they may lose business as more countries bid for projects. The push back from the Iranians came as a surprise to India, which has enjoyed special dispensation from Teheran as one of only a handful of countries willing to do business with it while it faced Western economic sanctions.

Under a tentative framework agreement reached between six major powers and Teheran in April, Iran agreed to limit its nuclear activity in return for sanctions relief. A final deal could be reached by 30 June. That prospect appears to have emboldened Iran, said sources familiar with trade negotiations with India, including in its handling of a sizeable deal to import railway tracks.

The $233 million contract, signed last October, was for India's State Trading Corp (STC) to facilitate exports of rail tracks from SAIL Ltd and Jindal Steel and Power Ltd to Iran's railways. But Iran told Indian negotiators that it had offers from other countries, including Turkey, to supply the equipment at a cheaper cost, the sources said.

Last month, New Delhi sent trade secretary Rajeev Kher to persuade Teheran to adhere to the original terms, but he came back "empty handed", according to one of the sources. "They are no longer the same Iranians that came to us last year for signing the deal," the source said. "They were polite this time, but had an upper hand in the negotiations."

A worker walks atop a tanker wagon to check the freight level at an oil terminal on the outskirts of Kolkata 27 Nov, 2013. REUTERS

India has cut the value of the deal by about 7 percent to $217 million, the sources said. They added that they worry the Iranians may seek further cuts, and could split the order with other countries.

STC chairman Rahim Khaleel declined to comment. Kher, Iran Rail, SAIL and Jindal Steel did not respond to requests for comment. It was not immediately clear whether other countries that trade with Iran have seen a similar hardening in Teheran's stance. Oil refinery sources in Japan said they had not seen any change yet.

Iran said it wanted to renegotiate the rail contract, because the euro had declined against the dollar and steel and iron ore prices had fallen significantly since the deal was first struck in 2014. Indian negotiators said price and currency risks were incorporated into the original agreement, but they had to give in, the sources said. It was a large order for the Indians and the spectre of competition from other suppliers loomed large, they added. "Earlier they were standing in line to offer us deals," one source said. Now, they ask the Indians to "wait in line and wait your turn."

The supply contract is expected to kick off within six months, and, under the renewed terms, India will supply 250,000 tonnes of rails to Iran over 18 months through STC. The shift in Iran's stance has also been visible in the vital energy sector. The National Iranian Oil Company has told Indian refiners, for example, that it would withdraw some of the discounts and free shipping it had been offering them on crude sales to maintain its oil output, oil industry sources said. The sources added that the state oil firm anticipated ramping up exports once the nuclear deal was finalised, after which there would be many more buyers for its crude.

In 2013, the then Iranian Oil Minister Rostam Qasemi visited India to offer development rights for a gas field on a production sharing basis, after getting special permission from parliament on a deal that would normally contravene Iranian law.

India did not sign the deal for the Farzad B gas field, as international sanctions barred investment in Iran's hydrocarbon sector, an Iranian diplomat said.

Now, Teheran has withdrawn the offer, according to Iranian media. Iran plans to auction the field instead, one report said.—Reuters

Third nuclear plant in Japan clears major hurdle for resumption TOKYO, 20 May, — An idled nuclear reactor owned by Shikoku Electric Power Co on Wednesday cleared a major hurdle toward resumption, giving another boost to the government's plan to revive nuclear power following the 2011 Fukushima meltdowns.

With the approval of the Nuclear Regulation Authority for its enhanced safety measures against earthquake and tsunami hazards as well as other severe accidents, the No 3 unit of the three-reactor Ikata plant in western Japan has joined a total of four reactors at two other nuclear plants in obtaining safety approval based on tighter post-Fukushima regulations.

The decision will likely be finalized after soliciting technical comments from the public for a month. But the reactor is not expected to go back online before winter, as Shikoku Electric has yet to gain local approval and finish other necessary procedures.

The utility said it will aim to bring the reactor back online by the end of this year.

Shunichi Tanaka, chairman of the NRA, said the regulator had "heated exchanges of opinions" with Shikoku Electric over the plant's safety before giving its approval.

Shikoku Electric applied for the safety screening of the Ikata No 3 unit in Ehime Prefecture, which began commercial operation in 1994, as soon as the tighter regulations were introduced in July 2013.

At the regulator's behest, the utility set tougher quake-resistance safety criteria for the plant's facilities and enhanced safety measures, including the construction of a new quake-proof, emergency response facility.

Currently, all of Japan's 43 commercial reactors remain offline amid safety concerns raised by the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear accident.

Prime Minister Shinzo Abe is seeking to reactivate reactors that have cleared the regulator's safety screening, saying it is necessary to lower electricity bills and boost economic growth.

Nevertheless, the outlook remains uncertain due to a prolonged regulatory screening process and other hurdles.

Two reactors at Kyushu Electric Power Co's Sendai plant in Kagoshima Prefecture, which became the first last year to meet the new safety requirements, are seen as the closest to restarting. But the plant is not expected to go back online before late July as the utility still needs to finish pre-operational checks.

Safety clearances were also obtained in February for two reactors at Kansai Electric Power Co's Takahama plant in Fukui Prefecture, but a recent court decision that has banned their restart also clouds the government's bid to revive atomic power.

A total of 24 reactors at 15 nuclear plants, including the Ikata unit, are currently undergoing the regulator's safety screening process.

deterrence and boasted of its ability to miniaturise nuclear warheads, a claim it has made before and which has been widely questioned by experts and never verified.

But Pyongyang is still "many years" from developing submarine-launched ballistic missiles, US Admiral James Winnefeld told an audience at the Centre for Strategic & International Studies (CSIS) in Washington on Tuesday.

"They have not gotten as far as their clever video editors and spinmeisters would have us believe," said Winnefeld, who is vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Analysis seen by Reuters from German aerospace engineers Markus Schiller and Robert Schmucker of Schmucker Technologie appeared to support Winnefeld's statement.

The Munich-based pair said photos of the launch were "strongly modified", including reflections of the missile exhaust flame in the water which did not line up with the missile itself.

North Korea, which regularly threatens to destroy the United States, had a track record of offering faked proof to claim significant advances in missile technology, Schiller and Schmucker said, such as poorly built mockups of missiles on display at military parades in 2012 and 2013.—Reuters

US willing to change pro-democracy programmes in Cuba

WASHINGTON, 20 May — The United States on Tuesday indicated its willingness to change pro-democracy programmes which it organizes in Cuba and which are condemned by Havana, removing one of the biggest impediments to restoring diplomatic ties.

A senior State Department official, speaking to reporters before talks with Cuban representatives on Thursday, said the sides had narrowed differences over reopening embassies since an agreement was reached in December to renew diplomatic relations.

The official said another obstacle had been removed after Cuba found a US bank that would handle the accounts of a restored Cuban embassy in Washington. The official declined to name the bank.

M&T Bank Corp canceled its services with Cuba's Interests Section in Washington in 2013 and Havana blamed the move on US sanctions.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the democracy programmes "have changed over time, and they will continue to change over time to reflect a reality, whether that reality is on the ground in Cuba or in the United States." The programmes include courses in journalism and information technology at the US mission in Havana. The United States sees them as normal diplomatic functions, but Cuban President Raul Castro said last week that they were "illegal" training for government opponents.

The official said the programmes have already been adapted but the United States would not halt them because they were the most direct way of supporting ordinary Cubans.

The talks in Washington on Thursday are the fourth round since US President Barack Obama and Castro agreed on 17 December to restore diplomatic relations, which were severed in 1961 during the Cold War. They will focus on upgrading the "interests sections" in Washington and Havana to embassies. Washington also wants an end to restrictions on the movement of its diplomats in Havana and the removal of Cuban security police around its premises.

Cuba signaled on Monday that it was ready to move ahead, saying it did not see any obstacles.

In the US Congress lawmakers who oppose and support close ties with Havana introduced Cuba-related legislation.

Two Republican senators who oppose normalizing ties, Marco Rubio of Florida and Louisiana's David Vitter, introduced a bill that would make ending restrictions on travel and trade conditional on Cuba resolving billions of dollars in claims over property seized during the island's communist revolution. Another group of senators introduced a bill that would open the way for US telecommunications and Internet companies to provide services and devices in Cuba. —Reuters

Train strike spreads to German passenger routes, millions delayed

BERLIN, 20 May — Millions of commuters faced long delays in Germany on Wednesday after train drivers walked off the job to demand higher pay and negotiating rights.

Two in three long-distance trains and hundreds of commuter services were cancelled after the small but powerful GDL union extended its open-ended strike to passenger routes. Freight trains were halted on Tuesday.

The walkout is the ninth in 10 months to hit rail operator Deutsche Bahn and industry has warned that the strike could cost Europe's biggest economy up to 100 million euros (£71.57 million) a day, hurting its image as an industrial and logistics hub.

The scope of the action has alarmed politicians, businesses and other unions in a country known for relatively harmonious labour relations.

It drew sharp criticism from both the BDA employers association and the DGB union umbrella organization.

"To put it mildly, this is going too far," DGB head Reiner Hoffmann told the Tagesspiegel newspaper, questioning the readiness of GDL chief Claus Weselsky to find a compromise deal.

The BDA said the damage caused to the economy overall was "completely disproportionate" with the steel, engineering and car sectors among those hardest hit because of their reliance on freight services.

"The GDL is taking Deutsche Bahn customers hostage for egoistical reasons to get more power," said BDA president Ingo Kramer. GDL, a member of the DGB, has been trying to poach members from other unions and strengthen its hand.

The GDL union has not said when the stoppage will end, just that it will be longer than the last strike which lasted nearly a week and was the longest in Deutsche Bahn's 21-year history.

Analysts say a 10-day strike could shave 0.1 of a percentage point off gross domestic product growth in the second quarter.

The GDL union, with 20,000 members, wants a 5 percent pay rise for its members, a shorter working week and the right to represent other workers in the company, such as train stewards.

Deutsche Bahn, with 200,000 employees, has offered a 4.7 percent pay rise plus a one-off payment of 1,000 euros, but it has refused to let the GDL negotiate for other workers.

Politicians, including Chancellor Angela Merkel, have urged the two parties to enter mediation.

US House Benghazi panel subpoenas former Clinton White House aide

WASHINGTON, 20 May — Congressional investigators have issued a subpoena demanding that former Clinton White House adviser Sidney Blumenthal testify next month before the US House of Representatives committee investigating the 2012 attack on US diplomatic facilities in Benghazi, Libya.

The subpoena, a copy of which was made available to Reuters, demands that Blumenthal appear before the House committee on 3 June to give a deposition. The subpoena is dated on Monday but carries a notation indicating an unnamed deputy US marshal served it on Blumenthal's wife on Tuesday.

The copy of the subpoena contains no further details about the subject matter of the deposition.

"I can confirm Mr Blumenthal has been called for a deposition by the committee," Jamal Ware, a spokesman for Republican Representative Trey Gowdy, the Benghazi committee chairman, said in response to a Reuters query.

More than two years ago, a set of emails sent by Blumenthal to Hillary Clinton while she served as secretary of state were posted on the Internet by a hacker who called himself Guccifer. Blumenthal did not work for Clinton when she was secretary of state and sent those emails as a private individual.

The emails included detailed private intelligence reports on events in Libya sent to Blumenthal by Tyler Drumheller, a former senior CIA officer. Some of the emails were sent around the time of the Benghazi attacks on and discussed information Drumheller's sources gave him about the attack.

On Tuesday, The New York Times published a handful of emails showing that Clinton had passed on some of the private intelligence reports to aides and other State Department personnel.

The messages show that at least one of the private intelligence reports made its way to a recipient who appears to have been Christopher Stevens, the US ambassador to Libya who was killed by militants during the 11 September, 2012, Benghazi attacks.

The emails, part of a batch of around 300 messages related to Libya that the State Department turned over to Gowdy's Benghazi committee earlier this year, show Clinton herself tersely expressing interest in some of the private intelligence reports and scepticism about others. In one email to an aide, Clinton, referring to one of the reports supplied by Blumenthal, wrote: "This strains credulity. What do you think?"

People familiar with the set of Clinton emails turned over by the State Department to Gowdy's committee said that the emails leaked to The New York Times were not a complete set of messages related to what Blumenthal sent Clinton.

Blumenthal is a former journalist who served in the Clinton White House as one of the most loyal defenders of both Hillary Clinton and her husband, former President Bill Clinton. During the congressional investigation into Bill Clinton's relationship with White House intern Monica Lewinsky, Blumenthal was accused by a longtime friend, the late British writer Christopher Hitchens, of spreading defamatory information about Lewinsky. Blumenthal denied the allegation.

Sustainable strategy vital to ecotourism development

By Aung Khin

Myanmar possesses diverse forests and green zones inhabited by a wide variety of flora and fauna, providing an ideal setting for nature-oriented ecotourism.

However, the ecotourism sector can only flourish once proper infrastructure is developed. Ecotourism focused on Myanmar's forest resources can play a key role in improving the socio-economic life of the people, but it is important that the sector is developed in a way that preserves these important resources.

The quantity and quality of Myanmar's forest coverage has declined significantly over the past 30 years. It is therefore vitally important that more protected areas are developed.

Improper land use, illegal hunting, introduction to invasive species, infrastructure development and climate change are the main threats to the country's biodiversity and must be tackled.

The country presently has several different categories of protected areas and each serves a specific function according to legislation and operating objectives.

In neighbouring countries, convenient transportation, electricity supply and other facilities are set up together with the development of ecotourism sites.

Poverty and increased consumption spurred by economic growth pose challenges to the ecotourism sector, as does increasing demand on natural resources from neighbouring countries.

Livelihoods of local people should not be neglected in the push to promote the ecotourism sector and conserve biodiversity. If they are able to gain income without damaging natural resources, the country can sustainably grow the revenue from this sector.

The Challenge of Change

Sonu Trivedi

Myanmar's growing rapprochement with the West has significantly challenged China's interest by changing the bilateral balance of power in the region. It has opened a window of opportunity for other countries to reach out to Myanmar which is considered as one of the virgin markets in Asia. Accelerated by loosening of sanctions and establishment of quasi-civilian regime after November 2010 elections, investments are pouring in from different directions.

After ending years of isolation, Myanmar's new foreign policy of proximity with the West offers immense opportunities. Myanmar has developed substantially different relationship with the United States and Western Europe in recent times with the easing of sanctions and reform process which was initiated after the new regime took charge in 2011. United States have been supportive of the reform process in Myanmar and USAID has been an active agent for initiating developmental partnership with the country. Strategically, it is viewed that a stable Myanmar in the region would provide impetus to the rebalancing strategy of the United States in the Asia-Pacific.

Transition and reforms in Myanmar has also brought about increased economic engagement with the European Union. After lifting its sanctions in April 2013, except the arms embargo, the European Union has sought active collaboration with the Government of Myanmar to assist reform process and to contribute to the political, economic and social development. The European Union is committed to the reform process in Myanmar and has agreed to a Comprehensive Framework which outlines its support to political, social and economic development, fostering respect for human rights and assisting the government in re-building its place in the international community.

Given the growing rapprochement of Myanmar with the West, in the light of the complex relationship of United States with China, such heightened economic engagement may affect the Myanmar-China bilateral relationship. China was the key player in Myanmar after the economic sanctions were imposed by the United States and the European Union since 1988, but easing of Western sanctions has increased competition and challenged the monopoly and dominance of Chinese presence. Obama's foreign policy of 'pivot' to Asia-Pacific has been a cause of concern for the growing Chinese presence in the region. It has prompted Chinese anxiety and heightened regional worries, which are now faced with a tough dilemma to choose between the United States and China. In this regard, Myanmar's regular dialogue with US leadership and high level visits have raised alarm bells for China.

Transition in Myanmar has also led to the opening up and its growing importance for the existing and newer regional powers. The mounting Japanese assertiveness in Myanmar sends a warning signal for China's growing influence in the country. Japan's assistance in the country's effort for democratization and building up of a future Myanmar has now deepened its partnership. Japan's geo-political ambitions and expanding economic opportunities is posing a strong challenge to the traditional regional powers in Myanmar. It has offered economic aid to support development of country's infrastructure in the hope of improving the investment climate for business. The coming together of Japan and Thailand in Myanmar on the much-awaited multi-billion-dollar Dawei megaproject and India's invitation to Japan to invest in and build overland infrastructure in the Northeast is going to outplay Chinese dominance in the region. Furthermore, Japanese entry into developing the Chennai port and an attempt to link it with Dawei port in Myanmar is an indication of Japan-India and Thailand coming together and forming an axis in a bid to confront China in Myanmar.

So far as India's interest in Myanmar is concerned, it is stepping up its development cooperation in the light of Myanmar's continuing reform process and its historical and cultural ties. India is regarded as a land of opportunity and a benign power, given the competitions that exist from the existing players and other potential stakeholders. In this regard, focus on 'commerce, culture and connectivity' by the Indian Prime Minister offers tremendous opportunities for boosting up trade and strengthening bilateral ties between the two countries. He regards Myanmar as "a valued friend and priority area". India is trying to leverage on 'soft' power diplomacy and fostering deeper economic and business links. As compared to Chinese loan which are more commercial in nature, India and Japan have kept their focus more on infrastructural development, capacity building and humanitarian assistance. Thus, India has been particularly instrumental in setting up of Centres for industrial training and enhancement of IT skills and other capacity building programmes.

There has been an enormous growth in China's influence in Myanmar, significantly, after the sanctions since 1989. The armed forces of Myanmar depended largely on Chinese assistance. Furthermore, the support of China has been crucial in diplomatic forums such as the United Nations Security Council. Increasing Chinese access to Myanmar's energy resources has been a matter of concern for regional powers because of its strategic implications. Due to growing Sino-Myanmar energy ties, China is investing heavily in developing ports in Myanmar, gaining greater access to the Indian Ocean. In the wake of sanctions which had for long blocked Western investments, China emerged as Myanmar's biggest ally, investing in infrastructure, mining projects, hydropower dams and twin oil-and-gas pipelines to help feed southern China's growing energy needs. However, it is noteworthy that Myanmar occupies a vital space on China's south-western flank. It is important as a trading outlet to the Indian Ocean for its landlocked inland provinces of Yunnan. Companies from Yunnan are big investors in mining, rubber and other industries in the bordering state of Kachin in Myanmar. Owing to its strategic location, Myanmar's market is essential to Yunnan's export economy. Besides, China's strategic interest is also guided by keeping its border trade routes secured and maintaining stability in the border regions.

Myanmar is also critical to China in its recent strategy of implementing 'Belt and Road Initiative' to enhance regional connectivity which includes the 'Silk Road Economic Belt' and '21st Century Maritime Silk Road'. It is expected that this initiative would speed up financial integration, trade liberalization, eliminate investment barriers, facilitate investment climate and people to people connectivity. The new maritime silk road aims at enhancing maritime partnership against the backdrop that China's geopolitical ties with its Southeast Asian neighbours brings both opportunities for cooperation and challenges from territorial disputes. It has been regarded as the central focus of China's foreign policy in the year 2015.

The economic and strategic outcome of the political transition and changes taking place in Myanmar has generated immense attention and interest and has also initiated debates regarding China's strategic, economic, geo-political interest in the country. Since 2011, due to space for the parliamentary debate, the unquestionable supremacy of the Chinese investments in the major three of China's largest investment projects in the country have faced intense criticism. Two projects—the massive Myit-sone dam on the Ayeyawady River and the Letpadaung copper mine—were suspended after locals protested against environmental and social impacts like flooding and pollution, though work on the Copper mine project was resumed subsequently, after the profit sharing agreement was revised. However, the pipeline to deliver oil and gas across Myanmar to China has survived, notwithstanding intense criticism. Nevertheless, its plan to build a highway and a high-speed railway line by 2015 which would allow people and cargo to travel from Kyaukpypu passing through Mandalay to Yunnan has been put on halt. Resentment against China is widespread in Myanmar, and the discontentment about the rail project was of great concern to the present regime which faces elections later in 2015.

Myanmar-China relations have also been marred by the resumption of recent conflict in the Kokang region. It has been regarded as one of the bloodiest conflict country has ever seen. Instability at the borders has been a cause of security concern for both the countries. Besides, security concern, the Kokang conflict has become a controversial issue for China.

In spite of sensitivity about China's growing strength and influence in the region, the relationship in contemporary period between China and Myanmar is characterized by strong bilateral trade and investment—ranking at the top so far as the bilateral trade and investment is concerned. Given the long term strategic and commercial interest of China in Myanmar, it seeks to resolve the conflict peacefully without undermining its own stake and the nationalist sentiments.

Saudi jets pound army bases, depots in Yemen capital

CAIRO, 20 May — Warplanes from a Saudi-led coalition carried out the most sustained bombardment of Yemen's capital Sanaa in nearly two months of air strikes on Tuesday night, residents of the city said, hitting army bases and weapons depots.

It was the first time air strikes continued from morning until after midnight since the campaign began on 26 March, residents said, and led to terrifying blasts across the city.

Yemen's exiled government in Riyadh, backed by the coalition, said on Tuesday it would not agree to talks with rebels until they withdrew from cities and surrendered weapons, meaning peace talks to end the civil war seem unlikely soon.

The coalition restarted strikes late on Sunday after a five-day humanitarian pause, waving away pleas for an extension by the United Nations by pointing to what it said were repeated abuses of the ceasefire by rebels.

The rebels, an alliance of the Houthi militia and army forces loyal to former president Ali Abdullah Saleh, control most of the populated west of Yemen, and have been fighting local groups in the cities of Aden, Taiz, Marib and al-Dhala.

The Houthis and Saudi forces exchanged artillery and rocket fire across the border on Wednesday night and coalition warplanes bombed the group's stronghold of Saada, the rebels said.

Sunni Muslim Saudi Arabia regards the Houthis as a proxy of its regional foe Shi'ite Iran, although many analysts say Tehran's ties to the group fall short of that, and wants to restore the government of President Abd-Rabbu Mansour Hadi.

An Iranian ship en route to Yemen's Hodeida port, which is controlled by Saleh and the Houthis, is due to dock on Thursday night, carrying activists and a cargo of aid, and has said it will not submit to searches by the coalition.

The United Nations Security Council last month passed resolution 2216 imposing an arms embargo on the Houthis. It also demanded militia abandon areas they have captured and return weapons seized

Iraqi forces say thwart Islamic State attack east of Ramadi

BAGHDAD, 20 May — Iraqi forces said they fought off an overnight attack by Islamic State militants east of the city of Ramadi, which the insurgents overran at the weekend in the most significant setback for the government in a year.

The insurgents attacked government lines in Husaiba al-Sharqiya, about halfway between Ramadi and the Habbaniya military base, said police and pro-government forces.

"Daesh (Islamic State) attacked us around midnight after a wave of mortar shelling on our positions," Amir al-Fahdawi a leader of the pro-government Sunni tribal force in the area, told Reuters.

"This time they came from another direction in an attempt to launch a surprise attack, but we were vigilant and, after around four hours of fighting, we aborted their offensive," he added.

Islamic State militants are seeking to consolidate their gains in the vast desert province of Anbar, where only small pockets of territory remain under government control, strung out along the Euphrates river valley and the border with Saudi Arabia and Jordan.

The Habbaniya base is roughly midway between Ramadi and the town of Fallujah, which has been under Islamic State control for more than a year and is just 50 km (32 miles) from the Iraqi capital.

Egypt appoints Brotherhood critic as new justice minister

CAIRO, 20 May — Egypt appointed judge Ahmed el-Zend, a fierce critic of the Muslim Brotherhood, as justice minister on Wednesday, the president's office said in a statement, angering opposition politicians.

Zend, head of a group that represents judges across the country, has regularly condemned the now outlawed Brotherhood, the Islamist movement removed from power in mid-2013.

In a speech from last year posted on YouTube, he also condemned the 2011 uprising that ousted veteran autocrat Hosni Mubarak for letting the Brotherhood reach power a year later.

While the courts have been gradually absolving Mubarak-era officials, they have been handing down lengthy sentences to liberal and Islamist activists on charges ranging from protesting to committing acts of violence. Some online commentators tweeted "No to Zend as justice minister" and shared videos of his past statements.

Apple, Android app makers cool to Microsoft overtures

SEATTLE, 20 May — Microsoft's plan to make its new version of Windows a mobile hit by letting it accept tweaked Apple and Android apps has met an obstacle: some of the software developers the company needs to woo just aren't interested.

Windows phones accounted for just 3 percent of global smartphone sales last year, compared with about 81 percent for devices with Google's Android system and 15 percent for Apple and its iOS system, according to research firm IDC. One reason is that Windows doesn't run as many or as attractive apps as its rivals.

To boost sales of its phones and new operating system, Microsoft said last month that it would provide tools to software developers to make it easier to design apps for Windows based on apps that run on Android or Apple. But because so few people use a Windows phone, most developers remain focused on the more popular systems and don't see a need to develop apps for Windows.

They also said they doubt how easy the new tools will be to use.

"Windows phone will have to gain a significant share of the market before this becomes something that saves us time and/or money," said Sean Orelli, a director at app development firm Fuzz Productions in New York, which makes apps related to Citibank, the New York Post, and Conde Nast, among others.

For Microsoft, the world's biggest software company, there's a lot at stake this summer as it rolls out Windows 10, the first operating system designed to run on PCs, tablets and phones. If developers don't embrace the new platform, it will seriously damage the prospects of the new operating system, which Microsoft hopes will power one billion devices in two or three years.

Interviews with more than a dozen developers found just one planning to move an app from Apple or Android to Microsoft (MSFT.O).

That's King.com, which ported its popular Candy Crush Saga game from iOS to Windows 10 "with very few code modifications" and will be installed automatically with upgrades to Windows 10, according to Microsoft. King.com confirmed the move but declined to comment further.

Eight developers said they aren't planning to develop for Windows 10 at all. Four who already have Windows apps said they would continue to do so.

Because Microsoft hasn't actually unveiled its new set of tools to turn apps into a Windows format, developers did not rule out any move, and a Microsoft spokesman said that "it is still early" and many software companies want to explore the tools over the coming months.

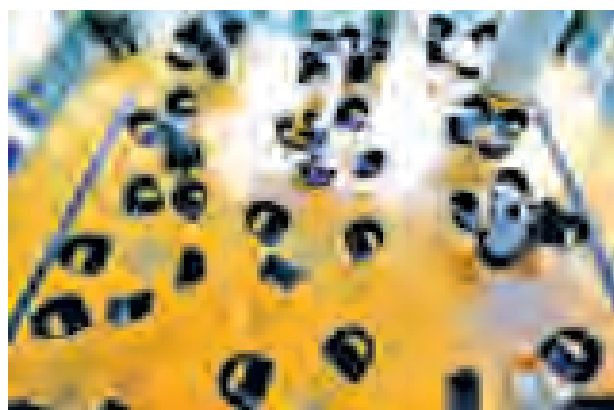

More and better apps might attract more people to buy a Windows phone or tablet, Microsoft reasons. Only six of the top 10 free apps on iPhone are available for Windows phone, and of those, two are made by Microsoft itself. In the past Microsoft has paid developers to create Windows apps.—Reuters

China to spend $182 billion to boost Internet by end of 2017

BEIJING, 20 May — China will spend more than $182 billion to boost Internet speeds by the end of 2017, a top government body said, as Beijing moves towards a more service-driven economy to boost growth.

The State Council said the government will invest more than 430 billion yuan ($69.3 billion) this year on network construction, with at least another 700 billion yuan ($112.8 billion) spent over the following two years. The goal is to accelerate the development of fibre optic broadband and high speed 4G mobile networks, the governing body said on its website.

net connexion speed, slower than Malaysia, Thailand and Taipei, according to cloud computing services provider Akamai's State of the Internet report for the fourth quarter of 2014.

Improving that standing is crucial for the world's second largest economy, which is experiencing the slowest growth in decades and is seeking to diversify away from low-tech manufacturing and development.

On Tuesday, China unveiled a vision for the next stage of its economic ascent, moving from low-tech manufacturing to advanced industry in areas such as space, e-commerce, green energy and bioengineering by 2025.

Premier Li Keqiang has also already identified the Internet and technology as vital catalysts for the shift towards an economy centred around services.

China's three state-owned wireless carriers are also on board. Last week, China Mobile Ltd, China Unicom (Hong Kong) Ltd and China Telecom Corp Ltd said they would cut mobile data prices and boost data speeds this year, potentially spurring a mass migration of customers to more lucrative 4G contracts.—Reuters

Eye-tracking tech makes virtual reality hands-free

LONDON, 20 May — An advanced virtual reality headset could be a game-changer for the entertainment industry and give people with certain disabilities new powers of communication and interaction, according to the developers. The FOVE headset uses eye-tracking technology to give the wearer an immersive and completely hands-free virtual reality, where all of their actions can be controlled by their eye movements.

Virtual reality technology has been touted as the next social and communications platform, with companies like Oculus VR one of the market leaders with their "Oculus Rift" virtual-reality glasses. But FOVE's co-developer and chief technology officer Lochlainn Wilson says their unique technology offers an immersive experience like no other.

"Eye-tracking is game-changing in VR. It allows for much more complex and subtle interaction than has been possible previously. By knowing exactly where the user is looking, characters in virtual reality can react to your gaze and return it naturally or avoid it or respond or question," he said, adding: "But what really sets us apart is eye-tracking, of course. So, with eye-tracking we enable a whole new world of interaction in VR. We enable really sensitive emotional experiences that could only otherwise be experienced in real life."

FOVE's eye-tracking technology uses two in-built cameras in the head mount to recognize the users' eye movement. At present users perform a short calibration sequence, where the device scans the user's eye and tracks the movement of their iris. The team says the next version of the device will use iris recognition to load user profiles.

Wilson says the device delivers an experience previously only possible in science fiction.

"In the control sense, we enable science fiction-like user interfaces like Tony Stark's Ironman and Jarvis; just at a glance user interface respond and updates information, targets an enemy, hits another button and they're blown up. It's pretty cool in that sense. In a more technical side of things, we enable what is known as foveated rendering; where you focus the processing power exactly what the user is looking at. By doing this, we drastically reduce the computing power required to deliver a believable scene."

The Tokyo-based start-up was founded by Wilson alongside CEO Yuka Kojima. And while they clearly have the games industry in their sights, the makers of FOVE say their device could also bring virtual reality to cinema, allowing viewers to interact inside the headset with objects and characters.

Chinese researchers help paper plant realize zero waste discharge

NANJING, 20 May — Chinese researchers have achieved the breakthroughs necessary for zero waste paper plants, significant for environmental protection.

Xu Nanping of the Chinese Academy of Engineering, told Xinhua that treatment film filtering technology has turned the 32,000-tonnes of waste water discharged by Jiangsu Oji Paper Co, Ltd each day into clean water, industrial salt and dried mud.

It took Xu and his team from Nanjing Technological University nine months to design the equipment. Xu is also deputy governor of east China's Jiangsu Province and head of the provincial department of science and technology.

The project is managed by a local water treatment firm and has been running successfully since January 2014. "Zero discharge of pulping waste water is unprecedented," said Oshima Tadashi, deputy general manager of Jiangsu Oji, a Japanese company with an investment of nearly two billion US dollars.

Paper plants are major polluters worldwide and it is common practice to discharge waste into rivers or the sea after treatment. The Oji plant once planned to discharge waste water into the Yellow Sea via a pipeline but the project was canceled due to protests by people living along the coast. The recycling project cost half as much as the pipeline was expected to and its operation costs are 30 percent lower. Currently, Oji Paper buys back 12,000 tonnes of reclaimed water from the treatment company every day. The recycled water is also bought by other companies. The quality of the water is better than that taken directly from the Yangtze or even tap water in terms of major quality indices, said Wang Chaohui, director of the area's environmental protection bureau. "The reuse of reclaimed water is of great value, especially for the Yangtze basin and regions short of water," said Xu.—Xinhua

Indonesia sentences Japanese man, 73, to life for drug smuggling

JAKARTA, 20 May —A 73-year-old Japanese man caught last year trying to smuggle drugs into Indonesia was on Wednesday sentenced to life behind bars.

Reading out the verdict of the judicial panel of the Pariaman District Court, Presiding Judge Jon Effreddi said Masaru Kawada was found “clearly and convincingly guilty” of trafficking more than 1 kilogram of drugs. Prosecutors had demanded a 16-year prison term.

According to the judges, witness testimony and evidence proved that Kawada committed the crime.

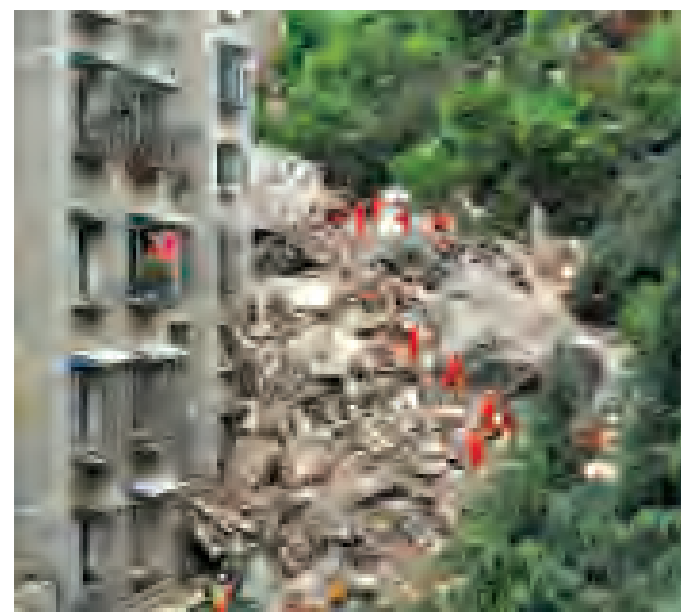

Upon hearing the verdict, Kawada’s lawyers said he will appeal to a higher court. The prosecutors indicted Kawada, who comes from Aichi Prefecture, of trying to smuggle 2.35 kg of methamphetamine into the country.

Kawada was arrested at Minangkabau International Airport in the West Sumatra provincial capital of Padang on 22 November after customs officials found the drugs in his luggage. Kawada has steadfastly maintained his innocence, saying he was duped into carrying the drugs.

In court, he said a Chinese woman he met in Macao asked him to deliver the bag in which the drugs were later found to a friend in Padang, and that he only realized he was carrying methamphetamine after customs officials in Padang arrested him.

Musicians, from opera to blues, seek to play New York subways

Musicians line-up in Grand Central Terminal's Vanderbilt Hall to take part in the Metropolitan Transportation Authority (MTA) 28th annual auditions for Music Under New York in Midtown Manhattan on 19 May, 2015.—REUTERS

NEW YORK, 20 May — It may not be the lights of Broadway but subway stations aren't a bad gig either, according to scores of musicians who auditioned on Tuesday to play in New York City's bustling underground terminals.

The auditions, attracting players of classical music, cabaret, opera, blues, reggae and even cartoon tunes, are hosted by the city's Metropolitan Transportation Authority to select performers allowed to play, or busk, in subway stations from Times Square to Yankee Stadium.

The conditions may be raw and the acoustics tricky, but the underground venue is like no other, the striving musicians said.

"It's a direct link into people's everyday lives," said Sebastian Lopez, 27, an accordion player auditioning with his pan-Latin band Yotoco.

"It's a way to share our music with people in a very casual environment and kind of surprise them as they're going about their daily lives," he said.

A panel of artists, transit officials and others judge the music for quality, variety and appropriateness, the MTA said. About 70 musicians or groups tried out and a third of them will get picked, it said.

Whilst musicians are allowed to play in the city subways if they follow MTA rules, these winners get choice spots and support from the MTA's Music Under New York programme.

"I'm excited about the exposure that it would allow us to have, meeting new people and finding new places to perform," said Judy Minkoff, 36, the leader of an all-female a cappella group called Stiletta.

New Yorkers get the benefit of good music, said Gregory Morgan, a 35-year-old drummer with the Sunnyside Social Club jazz band. Average weekday ridership on the subway system is 5.6 million, according to the MTA.

"The world needs more good food and good music. When you have those two, everyone's happy," Morgan said.—Reuters

'Sicario' with Emily Blunt as FBI agent brings drug wars to Cannes

CANNES, (France), 20 May — A film that Canadian director Denis Villeneuve says is meant to break "a cover of silence" about the brutality of the Mexican drug trade and the complicity of users in the violence that feeds their habits blasted its way into Cannes on Tuesday.

"Sicario", which means hitman in Latin America, is an action-packed thriller in which agents cross territorial and legal boundaries.

Emily Blunt plays FBI agent Kate who gets recruited into a high-risk CIA-led drug operation across the border.

Josh Brolin is Matt, the CIA team leader, whilst Benicio Del Toro, who played a conflicted cop in the 2000 narcotics-trade hit "Traffic", co-stars as a Colombian who has a role with the CIA team that does not become clear until the end.

The film, in competition for the top Palme d'Or prize, is filmed by Roger Deakins who creates a hellish Juarez, Mexico, where cartels turn the town into a war zone. A tunnel search scene with night-vision effects is a particularly superbly shot. Villeneuve said he had been drawn to the script, in which many of the characters, except Kate, seem to be lacking any kind of moral compass, because it brought out the moral ambiguities of the war on drugs and the violence of the narcotics trade.

"As a North American

I know that I share a part of the responsibility for that, and that violence is — from what I understood — under a cover of silence and I think that violence is horrible but violence under silence is more horrible," Villeneuve told a news conference.

Blunt said she had discovered after she took the role of Kate that there had been pressure to change her character to a man — a move that Villeneuve said he would not have accepted.

"I found this character quite damaged and vulnerable and she's struggling with this world of being a female cop — and certainly with the morally questionable things she's coming to experience with these guys," Blunt said.

"So you see this girl going through pretty much the worst three days of her life, she tries to maintain face for most of it so ... I didn't really think about adjusting it to make it more masculine," she said.

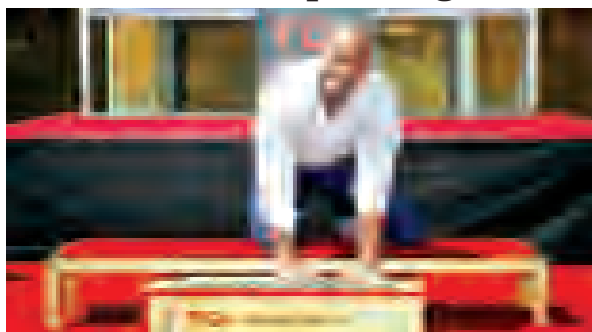

Brolin, who played US President George W. Bush in Oliver Stone's "W.", said he'd originally turned down the part of Matt but was glad that friends had convinced him to change his mind.

He said the wisecracking cynic Matt helps to lighten the tone, so the intensely dramatic moments have greater impact.

"My job in the movie is to be as anti-profound as possible," he said.

Cementing stardom, actor Dwayne 'The Rock' Johnson thanks Spielberg

LOS ANGELES, 20 May — Actor Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson gave a shout-out to director Steven Spielberg on Tuesday as he imprinted his hands and feet into the concrete outside the historic TCL Chinese Theatre in Hollywood.

The wrestling champion-turned-actor called Spielberg one of his idols and thanked the Oscar-winning director for sending him a congratulatory note "out of the blue." "This man who has inspired me over the years, inspired movie-making and created characters that I loved...this man told me: 'you're going for it, and just keep going for it,'" he said.

Johnson is set to star in the disaster movie "San Andreas," in which he plays a search-and-rescue helicopter pilot who must save his daughter after an earthquake devastates the California coast. The film opens in US theatres on 29 May. Johnson, 43, has become one of Hollywood's most bankable stars, thanks in part to his recurring role in the "Fast and Furious" franchise. The most recent film, "Furious 7," has earned more than $1.4 billion at the worldwide box office.—Reuters

Tokyo DisneySea to open new ride themed on “Finding Nemo” in 2017

TOKYO, 20 May —The operator of the Disney theme parks in Japan will open a new attraction featuring the Disney/Pixar “Finding Nemo” animated film series at the Tokyo DisneySea Park in spring 2017.

According to Oriental Land Co, the indoor attraction in the Port Discovery area will enable visitors to explore the underwater world of the 2003 “Finding Nemo” film as well as the upcoming “Finding Dory” film to be released in 2016 “by using a ride system that seamlessly blends visuals from the films with a motion system.”

With the opening of the new attraction, which will have a five-minute ride duration, StormRider will close permanently around mid-May 2016, Oriental Land said.—Kyodo News

Rio de Janeiro construction strike affects work at Olympic sites

RIO DE JANEIRO, 20 May —Heavy-construction workers in Rio de Janeiro, many involved in work for the 2016 Olympic Games, have begun a strike, the union representing the workers said, threatening to slow completion of projects that are already behind schedule.

About 70 percent of the 12,000 Rio de Janeiro-region members of the Intermunicipal Union of Heavy Construction Workers, known by their Portuguese-language acronym Sitracip, put down their tools on Monday, the union said. They plan to strike until at least Friday, the date set for an arbitrator to decide on conflicting demands from workers and management.

The union wants an 8.5 percent pay raise plus a 40 real ($13.29) increase in a monthly food subsidy. Employers have offered a 7.3 percent increase.

If the strike is resolved Friday, work on stadiums and transportation infrastructure projects should not be seriously affected, Sitracip president Nelson Duarte told Reuters late Monday.

“If it is not resolved, then we will go on strike indefinitely, Duarte said. “If there is a 10- to 15-day stoppage, there will be a negative impact on (Olympic) work.”

The workers’ demands come as Brazil’s economy slows but inflation remains stubbornly above the Brazilian government’s target of 4.5 percent a year, plus or minus two percentage points.

Brazilian consumer prices were 8.17 percent higher in April than a year earlier according to Brazil’s statistics agency IBGE.

Talks between union and management began in February, but construction and engineering companies rejected an initial demand for a 15 percent raise.

The Rio Mais consortium, which is responsible for work on 2016 Olympic projects, said the strike has not affected work on the Olympic Park, where major events such as track and field are scheduled. The Rio de Janeiro organizing committee declined to comment on the strike.

The companies say they are being pressured by the economic downturn and the fallout from a giant corruption scandal at Brazil’s state-led oil company, Petrobras, Duarte said.

Many of two dozen companies barred from working with Petrobras, formally known as Petroleo Brasileiro SA, because of a price-fixing, bribery and political kickback scheme are also involved in work on Olympic- and Olympic-related projects.—Reuters

Out of Africa? Texans offer sanctuary to endangered rhinos

SAN ANTONIO, 20 May — In the Texas grassland, home to white-tailed deer and rattlesnakes, outdoorsman Charly Seale sees a vast sanctuary of open spaces that could be used to protect the wild African rhino from its biggest enemy — poachers in search of the animals’ valuable horns.

Seale is part of an ambitious project organized by animal welfare groups in the United States and African countries to bring hundreds of orphaned baby southern white rhinos to the south Texas grasslands, whose climate and geography are similar to their native South African veld.

That is if governments will let them and the Texans can afford a transportation bill that could run tens of millions of dollars, all paid for by private donations.

“This is not for the faint of heart or for the faint of checkbook,” said Seale, head of the Texas-based Exotic Wildlife Association’s Second Ark Foundation, pointing out no public money will be sought for the effort, which is still in its early stages. Rhino poaching hit a record in South Africa last year, home to almost all the rhinos in Africa, with 1,215 killed in 2014, according to South Africa’s Environment Ministry.

International crime syndicates are after rhino horns, which are used in traditional Asian medicine and sell at prices higher than gold to the newly affluent in places such as Vietnam, where a belief, with no scientific basis, exists that they can cure cancer.

In January, South Africa said it had moved about 100 rhinos to neighbouring states to combat poaching. In 2015, another 200 rhinos will be moved to what Environment Minister Edna Molewa said are “strongholds” where the animals will be safer from poaching.

Some have ended up in Botswana, a country that allows the shooting of poachers on sight.

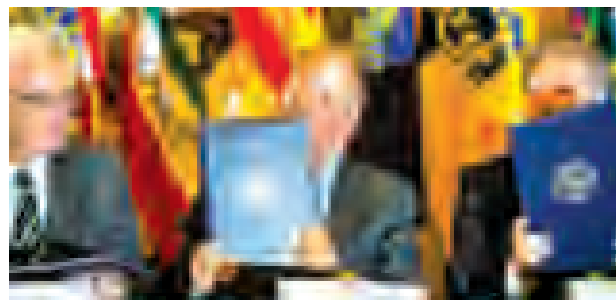

But what about Texas? If the plan goes forward — and there are many issues yet to be resolved — it would likely be the largest attempt outside of Africa to move rhinos out of harm’s way.—Reuters

California, international leaders sign climate change agreement

California Governor Jerry Brown (C) holds a signed agreement with Minister-President Winfried Kretschmann (L) of the German state of Baden-Württemberg, Mexican Baja California Governor Francisco Vega de Lamadrid (R) and nine other international states and provinces to limit the increase in global average temperature to below two degrees, in Sacramento, California on 19 May, 2015.—REUTERS

SAN FRANCISCO, 20 May — California and leaders of 11 states and provinces signed an agreement on Tuesday to limit their output of heat-trapping greenhouse gases 80 to 95 percent by 2050, a goal they hope will help prevent runaway climate change. The target, which is based on a 1990 benchmark, will allow the individual governments, which collectively represent more than $4.5 trillion in GDP and 100 million people, to tailor reduction plans to fit their regional needs. Called “Under 2 MOU” for a Memorandum of Understanding designed to help keep global temperature increase below 2 degrees Celsius, the pact seeks to provide a template for countries to follow to cut emissions.

The temperature mark is the warming threshold at which governments say climate change could become catastrophic and irreversible.

Later this year at a United Nations climate change conference in Paris, negotiators will attempt to reach an international agreement for nations to cut emissions.

“This global challenge requires bold action on the part of governments everywhere,” California Governor Jerry Brown said on Tuesday. “It’s time to be decisive. It’s time to act.” Signatories of the agreement were Acre, Brazil; Baden-Württemberg, Germany; Baja California, Mexico; Catalonia, Spain; Jalisco, Mexico; Ontario, Canada, British Columbia, Canada; Wales, and the US states of Oregon, Vermont and Washington.

Ontario Environment Minister Glen Murray described the agreement as one of the strongest of any under international negotiations and gives sub-national governments a common voice at the Paris conference.—Reuters

Confident McIlroy targets two more majors this year

LONDON, 20 May — Rory McIlroy is confident he can add two majors to his trophy haul this year after a successful 12 months in which he has proved himself to be the world's best player.

At Wentworth this week to defend his PGA Championship title, McIlroy on Tuesday picked up the European Tour Golfer of the Year and Players' Player of the Year awards.

The world number one, who has won four majors so far in his career, clinched his third tournament of 2015 on Sunday with a seven-shot win at the Wells Fargo Classic.

The 26-year-old, who claimed the WGC Match Play title two weeks ago, has been in superb form and now has six top-10 finishes in his last eight PGA Tour starts.

"There are three majors left and I feel two of those venues could suit me — St Andrews (The Open) and Whistling Straits (US PGA Championship)," he told Sky Sports.

"Chambers Bay at the US Open is a bit of an unknown quantity. But there are two great opportunities for major titles and a lot of other opportunities for wins."

"I'd also like to increase my lead in the world ranking," said McIlroy, who already has a lead of almost 200 points over Jordan Speith followed by Sweden's Henrik Stenson and Speith's fellow Americans Bubba Watson and Jim Furyk.—Reuters

Serie A criticised over fixture confusion

MILAN, 20 May — Juventus appears to have surprised Serie A organizers by reaching the Champions League final, forcing last-minute changes to the domestic fixture list.

Lega Serie A appeared to be caught out when Juve also qualified for the Coppa Italia final in Rome which had originally been scheduled for 7 June, one day after the Champions League showdown with Barcelona in Berlin.

Organizers have responded by bringing forward the Coppa Italia final — between Juventus and Lazio — by more than two weeks to Wednesday. This has only caused further complications in a snowball affect.

Lazio were due to play neighbours AS Roma on Sunday in a match crucial to both sides' hopes of qualifying for the Champions League and asked for the game to be moved to Monday to give them more time to recover.

Lega Serie A agreed, despite opposition from Roma, but that upset Napoli, who are also in the race for the Champions League, and, according to Italian media, have asked for their match against Juventus on Saturday to be played at the same time as Lazio-Roma on Monday.

It has led Giovanni Malago, head of the Italian Olympic Committee (CONI), to wonder why organisers did not see the pitfalls in the first place.

"Something has been underestimated and you have to realise that when you move one piece, it alters the whole system," he told reporters on Wednesday.

day. "There was a chance all this could have happened and it should have been foreseen."

He said that switching the Lazio-Roma match "undermines the credibility of the football system in front of public opinion." Roma's managing director Mauro Baldissoni was also critical.

Juventus' players celebrate their win against Inter Milan at the end of their Italian Serie A soccer match at San Siro stadium in Milan on 16 May, 2015.—REUTERS

"It's in the interest of Serie A to sell itself properly abroad and attract interest. And I don't think moving such an important game to Monday does that," he told the club's website. (asroma.it)

"It's probably not in the interests of those who invest money in the game, buying the TV rights in Italy and abroad.

"It might not be in the interests of the fans who have bought a ticket and who perhaps can't go to the game on Monday.

"Then there's the interests of the city itself, which will see an area understandably closed off for reasons of public order on a week day.

He added: "There have always been cup games on Wednesday and league matches on Sunday and no one has ever thought it strange. Juventus are playing on Wednesday too and they'll be back in action on Saturday."—Reuters

Casillas turns 34 with Real future uncertain

Real Madrid's Iker Casillas

MADRID, 20 May—Real Madrid goalkeeper and captain Iker Casillas turned 34 on Wednesday with uncertainty still clouding his future with the European champions and Real reportedly lining up David De Gea as his replacement.

Casillas has been blamed by some fans for Real's woes this season, when they failed to win any of the three major trophies, while arch rivals Barcelona are on the verge of a treble of Champions League and Spanish league and Cup titles.

The Spain international has suggested he wants to see out his contract, which runs until the end of the 2016-17 season, but he has been visibly irritated by his treatment at the Bernabeu in recent weeks.

While some sections of fans clearly back him, others have roundly whistled him, along with coach Carlo Ancelotti and Wales winger Gareth Bale.

Madrid-based sports dailies Marca and As both reported on Wednesday that Real had let Casillas know the club wants him to stay on next season.

Sterling should be embarrassed, says Carragher

LONDON, 20 May — Liverpool winger Raheem Sterling has come under a withering attack from two of the club's former stalwarts over his apparent reluctance to sign a reported 100,000 pounds ($155,340) per week contract.

The 20-year-old England international's future at Liverpool is clouded in uncertainty with British media reports on Tuesday suggesting Sterling is poised to request a transfer.

Manchester City are one of the club's being linked with a move for Sterling who, according to Liverpool manager Brendan Rodgers has been offered an "incredible" new contract.

With Liverpool insisting Sterling is not for sale, the saga is bound to rumble on into the summer and Jamie Carragher, now a television pundit, said he should be embarrassed to walk into training this week and suggested a change of agent.

"I'd be embarrassed to walk into training tomorrow and show my face to everyone; even the lady on the reception," former Liverpool defender Carragher told Sky Sports.

"Raheem Sterling is a great kid. He's not some flash young kid. He's not loud, he's not in people's faces. He loves his football.

"He needs to change his agent. That's the one thing he needs to change.

"For a 20-year-old kid to be taking on Liverpool Football Club, there's nothing worse.

"Raheem Sterling will obviously move on at some stage. Brendan Rodgers has said he won't be leaving this summer but it looks like he's trying to force the club's hand."

Carragher said Sterling still had to prove he was worth the kind of salary enjoyed by the Premier League's biggest names.

"If you want trophies and big money they won't be given to you, you have to earn them," Carragher said.

"What did Liverpool win this year? Nothing."

Former Liverpool winger John Barnes, who

Sterling has been compared to, echoed Carragher's comments.

"Raheem has not achieved anything, he has not won anything," Barnes told the BBC.

"Does anyone believe that if he goes to Manchester City he will be the first name on the team sheet or are they just signing him because they need English players?"

"Raheem has great potential, but Liverpool gave him an opportunity and he should stay for a couple of years."—Reuters
