State Counsellor attends opening plenary session of 27th World Economic Forum on ASEAN in Hanoi

STATE Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi attended the opening plenary session of the World Economic Forum on ASEAN in the Vietnamese capital of Hanoi yesterday.

In her opening address, the State Counsellor emphasized the technological leaps the country has achieved in the past five years, the dramatic drop in the price of mobile phones for example, but also stressed that the Fourth Industrial Revolution should be human-centric.

“Our approach to the Fourth Industrial Revolution is based on our belief in the creativity, empathy and stewardship qualities of our people, especially the young,” she said.

Myanmar enjoyed the advantage to leap-frog from line phone to 4G network, and Myanmar’s telecom sector has grown too fast that mobile phone penetration rose to 105 per cent today from about less than one per cent five years ago.

Approach to the Fourth Industry Revolution should be based on innovation, sharing and leadership, she said, saying the approach is concerned not only with youths but also human beings.

The State Counsellor also called for making more investments in human resources development as much as possible to achieve success in the Fourth Industrial Revolution for all human beings.

Fish scales sees commercial potential due to foreign demand

By May Thet Hnin

WITH foreign demand for fish scales, those interested can run business on a commercial scale, according to Myanmar Fisheries Federation (MFF).

“Buyers from Thailand and Japan connected with us in recent days. Thailand started to purchase 5,000 kg,” said U Win Kyaing, general secretary of MFF.

Japan traders proposed to buy Tilapia’s scales to be used in skin care products. However, Myanmar’s Tilapia production cannot still meet the market demand. Therefore, they took sample scales of rohu, carp and catla.

“Thai traders connected with us to produce aqua feed powder with the use of fish scales of fresh water fish including rohu, carp and catla. They purchased a kilo of fish scales at US$0.8,” said U Win Kyaing.

“They regularly want about 50 tons of fish scales per month, but only scales of freshwater and white fish.

Myanmar disposes fish scales as waste without recycling. A regular demand of fish scales will encourage small-scale businesspersons to systematically store them to resell, as this business can bring profits, like plastic bottles and caps sold for recycling. This is why we want to share this message through media”, he maintained.

In order to sell fish scales, they have to be sun dried after rinsing them with water for three times. At present, a viss of fish scales fetches Ks2,000. Sellers promised that a more competitive purchase price will be offered as time passes, U Win Kyaing continued.

Previously, there was demand of fish scales from Mahachai market in Thailand, to use them in cosmetics production.

In other countries, by-products of fish are used in cosmetic products, such as fish scale decoration on handbags and slippers, as organic fertilizer as well as aqua feed stuff, using fish bone powder, and livestock feed by extracting fish oil.

Myanmar’s fish farming sector is mainly dependent on the flesh. Recycling by-products can reap more profits and those interested can start a business. ■

Shan Nationalities League for Democracy presents its policy, stance and work program

Central Executive Committee Member Nann Htwe Hmon.

CENTRAL Executive Committee Member Nann Htwe Hmon of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy (SNLD) presented the party's policy, stance and work program on radio and television on 12 September. Following is a translation of the presentation:

May sung khaa.

First of all, allow me to extend our heartiest greetings for the health and happiness to all residing in the Union of Myanmar.

I am Central Executive Committee Member Nann Htwe Hmon of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy.

Respected voters and esteemed people,

Due to the past mismanagement under the one-party system and authoritarian rule, our nation is lagged behind as a least developing country until now. Today, our nation practices multi-party democracy system and moving in at a steady pace for democratic transition. Politicians of a party should have the following basic state of mind:

- (1) One must give priority to party's interest when it comes to self interest and party's interest.
- (2) One must give priority to people's interest when it comes to party's interest and people's interest.

If persons, who are meant to lead the Union, could not set aside and trim down their personal ego and self interest, they will not be able to lead for the development of the country. Actions and tasks of oneself and the party must aim at the interest of the people, and must uphold the people as parents.

At this juncture, I would like to say that leaders and members of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy always uphold first and foremost the interest of the people rather than oneself and the party.

The aim and purpose of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy is as follows.

While working and creating for strengthening the mutual respect trust among national brethren residing in the Union of Myanmar, the SNLD party also peacefully endeavors to the best of its ability for internal peace and national reconciliation. With a view to implementing internal peace process and national equality task in the lead role, basic policies are being laid out for cooperation. The sustainable peace construction policy of the party is as follows:

- (1) In building an independent federal union, it will be based on commitments and Panglong principle, as mentioned in the historic Panglong Agreement being exchanged and signed on 12 February 1947.
- (2) It will be based on the genuine Union principle, agreed and adopted at the all-state seminar held in Taunggyi in 1961.
- (3) It will be based on equality, self-administration rights and democratic system.
- (4) It will be based on the principle of mutual acknowledgment of nationalities residing in the Union, including mutual respect, assisting one another, unity and peaceful coexistence.
- (5) It will be based on the acceptance of diverse historical backgrounds, traditional culture, literature, language and national characteristics in conjunction with the creation of Union characteristic by all citizens.

Respected voters and esteemed people,

While implementing the tasks for a federal union and internal peace, we must not forget the historical facts from which the Union emerged and has existed.

The Union of Myanmar was first created on the 1947 Panglong Agreement. The Panglong Agreement was signed to acquire the independence of the nation, together in cooperation on the basis of equality between the different frontier (hilly) areas and the plains. It could be found that the historic Panglong Agreement was signed on the understanding that the new Myanmar nation would be built on union system, that the union will have political equality, and that full rights will be exercised for self-administration.

Owing to the Panglong Agreement, Myanmar was able to declare her independence on 4 January 1948. The commitments of Panglong have brought in a genuine national unity among national brethren. If one looks into that reality, it shows that national brethren have not created separate independent states, but instead pooled their rights together and created a Union.

It could be clearly seen that the whole of the frontier areas had not been integrated into the Union by force with the threat of arms, but joined the Union on their own on the basis of equality, the Panglong spirit, and the Panglong commitment.

Our party, the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy, would carry on the historical duty for the implementation of the essence mentioned in the Panglong commitments, which is the basic foundation of the Union.

Respected voters and esteemed people,

In building a federal democratic union, national equality and self-administration rights play a vital role. Assessing the challenges actually encountered in the implementation of national equality and a federal union, the following are being found:

- (1) The process of peace building;
- (2) The process of democratic transition;
- (3) The process of building a federal union;
- (4) The historical legal rights of nationalities;
- (5) The development of states of the national races;
- (6) Finding solutions to armed conflicts;
- (7) Regarding the rights of the ethnic minorities.

The country spent over half a century under authoritarian rule, resulting in the absence of democracy for a long period. Thus, we are encountering in this period rivalry between the revolutionary spirit and the reform spirit, and head on collision on ideology of the security and defence oriented group and the civilian democratic government. At the same time, we are also facing a constitutional crisis that has ignored the desire and aspiration of the entire national races and people. Moreover, we are also experiencing an initial stage of democratic transition. A lengthy period of systematic destruction has resulted in the inability of performance by government organizations, democracy practice that is still not firm and solid, weakness in the rule of law, deep-rooted habits of bribery and corruption, lack of media freedom, and incapable civil societies.

Weakness is also seen in major extraction of natural resources, citing development of the country; environmental degradation problem; controversial large projects; monopoly by business cronies over business projects; and lack of transparency.

Challenges are also seen, such as that of international pressure emerging from the Rakhine State issue, Myanmar being pushed into the global front due to geopolitical competition between China and Western countries, and rise in religious fanaticism and nationalists extremism.

Respected voters and esteemed people,

For all national races to be prosperous and peacefully co-exist in the Union is based on the application of certain political system. The most vital factor in building a federal union is to design Union characteristics, accepted by all concerned. In this connection, there are two kinds, the structural characteristics and the essence characteristics.

Structural characteristics are as follows:

- (1) All characteristics and symbols, signs and special emblems, figures and images owned and accepted by the people of the nation are to be utilized in all relevant places of the country.
- (2) Relevant personal emblems, figures and images of certain states are to be recognized and utilized in the relevant states.
- (3) With regards to places in the Union, all emblems, figures and images of the states are to be kept and displayed.
- (4) Historical legacies, special days of commemoration, cultural events of diverse national races are to be mutually exchanged and accepted as valuable and worthy.

Essence characteristics are as follows:

- (1) The building of democracy, equality, self-determination with full rights to create a Union and integrate as states in the Union.
- (2) The building of a strong system that checks and balances the legislative, administrative and judicial sectors, standing out separately and functioning independently.

- (3) The building of a strong and sound interactive relations system between the Union and the states governments, and among the states governments.
- (4) Sharing the budget, resource management and utilization, for standard and equal development of all states.
- (5) The implementation of a clear and transparent federal administration system.

Respected voters and esteemed people,

The building of a federal union by an individual's endeavor and efforts would be very difficult. The Shan Nationalities League for Democracy believes that all national races that had built the Union must come together with collective leadership and responsibility in building a prosperous and peaceful Union.

Our SNLD party stands out as an honest and matured party until today and always upholding the aim for internal peace, harmony among national races, the peoples' needs, and the construction of a federal Union. We will go ahead with courageous steps for justice, liberty, equality and peace to take root and develop in this country. Our party will strongly step ahead to the future holding the historical task, and will try to leave a legacy with a firm foundation that guarantees in full national equality in a genuine federal union.

I would like to offer my firm promises here that if the respected people vote for our representatives of SNLD party as lawmakers, they are sure to serve the interests of the people.

Therefore, I take this opportunity in urging the respected people to proceed to the polling booth on the upcoming voting day and vote with a courageous manner for the development of the social life of the people and for the peace of the nation. Please vote with a decisive spirit.

In conclusion, I would like to call upon all to create a federal union enveloped with full happiness.

I wish all to come together in building the nation.

May sung khaa.

Area settlement, amassing military power should be avoided to prevent armed conflicts while building trust: JMC-U Chairman

DURING the 18th meeting of the Union-level Joint Monitoring Committee (JMC-U) held at the National Reconciliation and Peace Centre (NRPC) in Yangon yesterday, JMC-U Chairman Lt-Gen Yar Pyae called for all sides to avoid area settlement and amassing military power so that armed conflicts can be circumvented while everyone is working to build trust among each other.

The chairman said that these acts can breed suspicion and gave warnings to avoid any measures that can trigger conflicts.

The 18th meeting of the JMC-U will discuss the implementation process of the results from the previous 17th JMC-U meeting, review the excursion to Norway to study its peace process, assess the fund proposal for FY 2018-2019, discuss ceasefire implementations conducted during the time period between the 17th and 18th JMC-U meetings, the operations of the Local Civilians Monitoring (LCM) Groups, and matters relating to enforcing ceasefire agreements.

The first day of the 18th JMC-U meeting was initiated with opening speeches by the JMC-U Chairman, Lt-Gen Yar Pyae, Vice-Chairman (1) Saw Issac Po, and Vice-Chairman (2) Sai Myo Thant.

In his opening speech, the JMC-U Chairman reiterated that the purpose of the JMC is to monitor, evaluate and verify, and to solve conflicts.

He said the main objective among them is solving conflicts, which can be accomplished through acquiring mutual agreements, conducting regular meetings, and emergency meetings if necessary, and to implement agreed rules and regulations when resolving conflicts.

He urged avoiding armed conflicts as they bring negative consequences for the concerned organization and local residents involved. He said the Nationwide Ceasefire Agreement (NCA) contains facts that military forces have agreed to follow to reduce armed conflicts. He said the representatives of the Ethnic Armed Organizations (EAOs) are all aware of the mutually agreed upon facts and principles to reduce armed conflicts and it is up to everyone to ensure they are being followed.

The Chairman said that current ongoing conflicts are the result of area settlement and amassing of military power. He said Chapter 3-Section 5(B) of the NCA clearly indicates that all parties have to avoid provocative acts and both direct and indirect libeling towards other parties. He called for all sides to take on the view of working for the good of the nation, and said mutually positive gestures will follow accordingly.

Next, JMC-U Vice-Chairman (1) Saw Issac Po delivered his opening speech, saying that the JMC-U is almost reaching its third year of inception and that he believes it is due to the shared mindset of everyone that the JMC members have been steadfast. The success of the JMC depends on everyone in attendance, he said.

This was followed by an opening speech from civilian group representative member and JMC-U Vice-Chairman (2) U Sai Myo Thant, who said that the JMC will have its share of disputes as it is a tripartite by nature

Disaster prevention, preparedness is better than cure

RISING costs from natural disasters over the last three decades have urged the Asian governments to invest more in disaster preparedness to lessen damage from calamities.

Myanmar ranked 42nd in 171 countries of the world that are most at risk to natural disaster and ranked 15th highest in the world for a lack of readiness in responding to natural disasters.

It is obvious that we need to be ready to resist and respond to natural disasters. If we want to overcome the challenges posed by natural calamities, more needs to be done.

More needs to be done if Asia is to overcome the challenges posed by natural calamities.

Myanmar needs to find a system or a scheme which can provide a sustainable solution to preventing losses caused by disasters instead of annually providing aid to farmers in the aftermath, said Vice President U Henry Van Thio at the meeting with authorities and associations in Nay Pyi Taw on Tuesday to seek ways for reducing the impacts of the disasters.

“ Myanmar needs to find a system or a scheme which can provide a sustainable solution to preventing losses caused by disasters instead of annually providing aid to farmers in the aftermath.

in 2018 would be supplied with seeds and inputs, such as fertilizer, worth billions of kyats in a timely manner so that they can get back on their feet in terms of food security.

The meeting was held to seek ways for effectively dealing with the agricultural sector, which is largely hit by disasters every year, and for providing remedies to the country's basic production sector.

We should think about which per cent of the total spending for natural disasters goes to preparedness and prevention and which per cent should be spent on response.

Because, a new study on impacts of disasters shows that every investment in prevention would bring four to seven times savings in terms of reduction in damage.

In some countries, it is found that only 4 per cent of the total spending for natural disasters goes to preparedness and prevention while 96 per cent is spent on response.

Our investments also should go to technology, innovation, advanced information and vigilant local governments and the public for disaster preparedness as they are playing an important role in alleviating the effects of disasters and in reducing risks from calamities.

IHAD written over a dozen or so articles related to climate change. In those articles, I had persistently pointed out what the causes are behind the climate change, the imminent threats and dangers that our Earth, human beings and all living things could be subjected to. At one time, I thought there was nothing more to write about it, which I even mentioned in one of my articles. However, I was totally wrong, because almost nearly every day new findings and discoveries about the effects of climate change are emerging.

Today, there are still many who are totally unaware of what causes climate change. The worst are those people, including some authoritative persons, who deny there is a climate change plaguing the world or who deny it was caused by humans. As for that second group of people, their denial must be based on political or economic reasons, but surely they are not ignorant, so I don't intend my articles to make them change their stances. However, as for the first group, who are unaware, should be educated about the causes and the consequences of the climate change that is progressing at an alarming rate and how human beings are causing them.

Before proceeding to write about those new findings and discoveries, I would like to recall some salient points about climate change, which I had mentioned time and again in my articles. I am doing it for the benefit of those who are not yet familiar or are unaware of them. These points are necessary to be known by every human being, so that they may be able to contribute towards countering climate change.

Salient points on climate change from my articles

Since the time of the Industrial Revolution that begun in the 18th century, when steam-powered engines that burn wood or coal to heat the boilers came into existence, our planet was exposed to the excess of greenhouse gases—carbon dioxide, nitrous oxide, methane and a few other gases. These are called the greenhouse gases, because they envelope the earth and act like a greenhouse. They prevent the sun's radiations from being reflected back into space, causing temperatures to rise, which is the main cause of the global warming. This global warming, in turn, affects the climate phenomena that has been going on naturally to deteriorate. That is a brief description of how climate change happens. With the invention of internal combustion engines which use diesel, kero-

Effects of climate change worse than thought about

sene or petrol, global warming worsened as more and more greenhouse gases were emitted.

The consequences of climate change are in a variety of ways. Extreme temperatures cause desertification, drying up of streams, creeks, rivers, ponds and lakes, severe droughts, depletion of grasslands and grazing grounds for animals, both domestic and wild, more frequent and severe wildfires depleting large swaths of forests, disappearance of wildlife habitats, more frequent and stronger storms, flooding, melting of icebergs from around the world causing ocean level rises, depleting habitable and arable lands, effecting agricultural and fishery industries and endless number of other adverse effects.

Few decades ago, the above-mentioned consequences of climate change were not as visible as today. People didn't seem to be concerned with it, though some climatologists ardently tried to point out the consequences of the looming catastrophes of climate change all along. However, in the past few decades, the effects of climate change became more noticeable. The United Nations had to get involved in the fight against climate change. Starting from 1990 with the first United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) held for the first time in Berlin, the United Nations had held such conferences every year at different venues around the world. The Paris conference, called the COP21, must be credited as the most productive and managed to pass some resolutions in connection with the control of climate change. COP22, held in Marrakesh, Morocco, should also be credited for being able to ratify the resolution that was laid down in Paris the previous year, to come into force.

According to the Paris Accord, the signatories to the ratification must endeavour to maintain the temperature rise at 1.5° Celsius or lower, above the average temperatures of the pre-Industrial Revolution period. To achieve that goal, the signatories must endeavour to reduce greenhouse gases, especially the carbon dioxide emissions, by substituting fossil fuels with renewable or green energy, such as hydro, solar and wind energy. Also, they must create carbon sinks to absorb the carbon dioxide from the atmosphere by growing more trees and forest conservation. During the COP21 held in Paris, the tiny Himalayan Kingdom of Bhutan was commended as the most forested country in the world, with over 80 per cent of the country covered with forests.

New findings and predictions
Due to relentless ongoing researches of scientists from around the world, we learn more and more about the effects and consequences of climate change. The latest findings and predictions for the future are emerging in the international medias almost every now and then. To cite one very interesting finding related to the effects of climate change on the civilizations, a group of scientists unanimously came to the conclusion that the Maya Civilization, that flourished between 1800 B.C to A.D 250 in South America, came to an end due to severe droughts brought on by climate change. Also, their findings applied to the collapse of the Ancient Egyptian Civilization and those of some Mesopotamian civilizations. Their findings are quite tangible.

As for the predictions for the future, scientists had warned that if emission of the greenhouse gases cannot be reduced, and if temperatures cannot be maintained at 1.5° Celsius or lower, the climate change will worsen. Icebergs around the world are melting at an alarming rate even now. If the temperature rise cannot be brought down from the present level, the melting of ice will worsen. The consequences of which will be the rise in ocean levels, submerging the low lying areas causing tiny islands to disappear. The disappearance of tiny islands is already happening. Such situations will drive populations to move inland. Lands that are inhabitable and arable will become scarce and social unrests will follow. Even now there are exodus of migrations from af-fectured areas, especially from Africa. The worst case scenarios will be armed conflicts breaking out everywhere.

The latest prediction is, if the climate change cannot be put under control, the world landscape will become unrecognizable in 100 years' time from now. This could be true. Because even now, many landscapes are changing around the world due to desertification, ocean levels rising, tiny islands disappearing, coastlines receding, and many other minor changes around the world are already happening.

A ray of hope or disaster?

While many findings and predictions are pointing to a doomed world because of the temperature rise, one encouraging finding and a prediction based on it appeared out of the blues. Some scientists had found that for over a hundred days in the past year the sun was flawless, meaning there was no sign of solar activity, an indication that the sun is cooling down somewhat. The sun's heat reaching the earth will be gradually reduced, if the sun enters a long period of inactivity. This phenomena could lead to a "mini ice age" or the "little ice age", like the one that happened in around the 17th century. With the consequences of temperature rises looming, this may be a ray of hope, but may also be a disaster, because many lives perished during the last "little ice age". Anyhow, in the beginning of that predicted "little ice age", I hope there will be some reprieve for the warming globe for quite some time, before the adverse consequences of the cold climate hit us in full force. Some climatologists are of the opinion that the "little ice age" could be upon earth as early as 2030, but some are skeptical and shrugging off that idea as just a myth.

Conclusion

Having laid bare the facts, causes, consequences and the counter measures to be taken in the fight against climate change, it's up to us, humans, to take more responsibility in shaping our destiny. At least, if people become aware of the climate change taking place and accept that human activities are the main causes, it will be quite helpful. Hopefully, it will be enough in helping to counter it. Also, it is to be hoped that some authoritative persons come to their senses and accept this fact and stop denying and participate in the fight against climate change by honouring the ratifications signed by their predecessors at the UNFCCC held in Marrakesh and successive agreements reached at the annual conventions.

Lately, to be more precise, from 4-9 September, there was a UNFCCC event being held in Bangkok, Thailand. From my point of view, the choice of Bangkok as a venue for such convention, though not an annual event, since it is scheduled to be held again from 2-14 Dec at Katowice, Poland (COP24), is very appropriate. Bangkok and its surroundings are inundated almost every year due to sea level rises, coastlines had receded noticeably and flooding in downtown areas, suburbs and countryside are becoming more severe. Bangkok is literally sinking. The choice of Bangkok as the venue for the convention at this time of the year must be to showcase what climate change is capable of doing. At the time of writing this article, the convention in Bangkok is still ongoing and no full report has emerged. However, let us hope that it will be able to produce some viable agreements that will be helpful in the fight against climate change.

Myanmar Global Investment Forum continues

MYANMAR Global Investment Forum held by Myanmar Investment Commission and Hong Kong-based Euromoney Institutional Investor (Asia) continued at the Myanmar International Convention Centre (II) (MICC-II) in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday.

Ministry of Commerce's Permanent Secretary U Yan Naing Tun delivered a speech at the forum.

In his speech, the permanent secretary said investment and trade are like two sides of a same coin. Today's Myanmar Global Investment Forum is very significant for improving Myanmar investment environment and enhancing trade sector as well.

Since 2011, Ministry of Commerce has adhered to its policy reform and the win-win strategy of opening-up in the line with international rules and regulations, he said.

Moreover, a series of liberation and openness for policy development have been introduced for enhancing viable trade environment.

Among the changes, introducing the Negative

List of import goods, services policy liberation for wholesale and retail businesses, allowing foreign companies for trading of agricultural inputs, construction materials, medical equipment and value-added goods are paramount steps for trade sector development.

Reflecting such a series of liberation and openness in trade and investment facilitation, Myanmar's economy has been improving gradually. The percentage of trade contribution in GDP has also been increasing gradually.

Myanmar has been the beneficiary country of Generalized System of Preference (GSP) provided by preference giving countries. Myanmar has enjoyed EU GSP program since 2013 and the US GSP Program since 2016.

"Such condition has been a basic foundation for enhancement of trade sector, investment sector and production sector. Here, I would like to urge investors and exporters to utilize such opportunities effectively and efficiently" said U Yan Naing Tun.

Ministry of Commerce has also been paying attention for export promotion in order to reduce trade deficits. The export volume of rice reached up to 3.59 million tons in 2017-2018, reaching the highest volume within past 70 years.

The total volume of trade has been increasing year after year. In 2016-2017, the volume of trade (VOT) was over US$ 29 billion and it increases to about $ 34 billion in 2017-2018, resulting net increase of $ 4 billion within one year.

Regarding Foreign Direct Investment (FDI), as Myanmar has been an agro-based country, there have been a lot of potentials in Agriculture sector and Livestock breeding sectors.

Moreover, the country's CMP industry has emerged as a very promising one. The export value of CMP garment was only $ 850 million in 2015-2016, but it significantly increased to three times within two years, reaching $ 2.5 billion in 2017-2018.

Under a certain constraints and challenges, government and private sector have been working together to emerge better business environment and to integrate Myanmar into the global economy.

"I hope this forum is opportune for all of us to engage and exchange of ideas for emerging better business environment particularly investment facilitation," said U Yan Naing Tun.

Vanished China star Fan last in 'social responsibility' ranking

BEIJING—China's highest paid movie star Fan Bingbing, who has not been seen in public since July, was placed last in an academic report ranking A-list celebrities on their social responsibility.

The 36-year-old actress has been a household name in China for years and tasted Hollywood success with a role in the 2014 blockbuster "X-Men: Days of Future Past".

Last year, she topped Forbes magazine's list of top-earning Chinese celebrities with income of 300 million yuan ($43 million).

But she has gone quiet in recent months, following allegations of tax evasion.

In the report by Beijing Normal University published earlier this month, 100 Chinese stars including popular actor Jackie Chan and award-winning actress Zhang Ziyi were ranked according to their professional work, charity work and personal integrity.

But with a pass requiring a score of more than 60 percent, only nine celebrities made the cut, with Chinese actor Xu Zheng topping the list at 78 per cent.

Fan had a score of zero.

The report's authors said they studied the celebrities' behaviour to assess the extent of their social responsibility but did not elaborate how they arrived at the results, saying that the findings were based on "research and web-scraping".

The ranking has split fans online, with many jumping to Fan's defence.

"What kind of a report is this? Fan has done so much good work in the past!" one user wrote on the Twitter-like Weibo platform.

Fan has been unusually quiet in recent months—with no new posts to her normally active personal Weibo account since May — amid speculation about her whereabouts.

The actress's troubles began when Cui Yongyuan, a former presenter for state-run China Central Television (CCTV), posted purported contracts online in May that suggested she had received under-the-table payments.

A statement released by Fan's studio said she was the victim of "slander" but did not dispute the authenticity of the documents Cui released.

So-called "yin and yang" dual contract arrangements—with one contract for income declared to tax authorities and another kept secret—are reportedly used to evade taxes.

After the documents posted by Cui went viral, the state tax administration was reportedly investigating alleged use of such dual contracts in the entertainment industry in eastern Jiangsu province.

Although Fan was not mentioned by name, she has businesses registered in Jiangsu. —AFP ■

Snakes on a plate: Viet Nam's coiled cuisine

YÊN BÁI (Viet Nam) —With their meat served up in a wide array of dishes and blood added to rice wine, snakes make a reputedly satisfying—and nourishing—meal in Viet Nam.

Caught in the jungles of the north of the country, snake flesh is traditionally believed to help with cooling overheated body temperatures, relieving headaches and easing digestion.

Restaurants will cook it steamed or fried with lemongrass and chilli and serve it with a rice wine mixed with snake blood, said chef Dinh Tien Dung, who works at a restaurant in Yen Bai province three hours northwest of the capital Hanoi.

Holding a snake's head with one hand, Dinh Tien Dung slit its body near the head with a knife and squeezed blood out of it, dripping it into a cup of rice wine.

"We make use of every part of the snake except its head and its scales," said the 32-year-old.

Locals believe that only men over 50 should drink snake wine, as younger males are likely to experience "backache or impotence," said restaurant owner Duong Duc Doc. —AFP ■

Sharp's humanoid robot to guide tourists in taxis in Kyoto

TOKYO—Sharp Corp's RoBo-Hon, a small humanoid robot with artificial intelligence features, will accompany tourists in taxis in Kyoto and offer sightseeing guidance in Japanese, Chinese and English from 22 September; the service providers said on Tuesday.

Sharp, Kyoto-based taxi operator MK Co and travel agency JTB Corp said they have teamed up to provide the tourism package until 31 March next year to meet the growing demand for sightseeing using taxis amid the increasing number of travelers to Japan. In the package, which will be on sale from next Monday, passengers in taxis can learn about the history and culture of the sites they are visiting from conversations with RoBoHon, a two-legged robot that can interact with users through AI besides having basic mobile phone functions such as voice service and camera.

Customers can also take the robot out of taxis with them to tourist spots to use as a guide. For the tourism package, however, the robot's mobile phone and email functions cannot be used.

It will cost 6,000 yen ($53) per person if two or three passengers share one RoBoHon and 7,000 yen if one passenger uses the robot for a six-hour tour.

The tour will start from an

New study finds key gene linked to blood cancer

TIANJIN—Chinese and American researchers have identified a gene that plays a key role in the development of blood cancer.

Myelodysplastic syndromes (MDS) are a group of cancers in which immature blood cells in the bone marrow do not mature and therefore do not become healthy blood cells. About 30 per cent of MDS patients may develop leukemia, and there is no cure and the incidence is increasing with the global population aging.

It is believed that MDS are caused by gene mutations in blood-making stem cells in bone marrow. Previous studies have found 40 to 60 gene mutations in MDS patients, but the mechanism of how these gene mutations function and their role in the development of MDS were unclear.

A research team, led by experts from the Institute of Hematology under the Chinese Academy of Medical Sciences and the Cincinnati Children's Division of Experimental Hematology & Cancer Biology, has identified a transcription factor HIF1A, encoded by the gene HIF1A in patient cells, that can regulate functions in blood-cell-making stem cells in bone marrow.

In experiments done on mice, researchers removed or inhibited the gene HIF1A, and they found that all MDS mice had prolonged survival and their health conditions were significantly improved, which confirmed that the role of the gene in developing MDS.

The research was recently published in the international journal Cancer Discovery.

Further study will focus on developing new drugs and therapies targeting HIF1A for MDS patients, according to lead researcher Xiao Zhijian.—Xinhua ■

Scientists find how bilingual speakers switch between two languages

WASHINGTON—Researchers revealed some new knowledge about what happened when we switched between different languages that may offer new insights into the nature of bilingualism. The study published on Monday in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences showed that the neural activity in that process was exclusively associated with disengaging from one language and then engaging with a new one.

"This research unveils for the first time that while disengaging from one language requires some cognitive effort, activating a new language comes relatively cost-free from a neurobiological standpoint," said the paper's senior author Liina Pyllkanen, a professor in New York University (NYU)'s Department of Linguistics and Department of Psychology. Previous research has linked language switching with increased activity in areas associated with cognitive control in the prefrontal and anterior cingulate cortices. However, it was unknown whether it is disengaging from the previous language or engaging in a new language that drives this activity.

This is largely because these two processes happen simultaneously when participants switch, say, from speaking Spanish to speaking English, turning Spanish "off" and turning English "on" happen at the same time.

The researchers studied bilingual individuals fluent in English and American Sign Language (ASL), who often produce both languages simultaneously.

"The fact that they can do both at the same time offers a unique opportunity to disentangle engagement and disengagement processes, that is, how they turn languages 'on' and 'off'," said the paper's lead author Esti Blanco-Elorrieta, a postdoctoral candidate at NYU.

Therefore, the researchers could ask the participants to go from producing both languages to producing only one, thus isolating the process of turning a language "off", or to switch from producing a single language to producing both, thus isolating the process of turning a language "on."

They used magnetoencephalography and observed bilingual signers/speakers who viewed the same pictures and named them with semantically identical expressions. The results showed that when bilinguals fluent in ASL and English switched languages, turning a language "off" led to increased activity in cognitive control areas while turning a language "on" was no different than not switching.—Xinhua ■

US teens prefer remote chats to face-to-face meeting: study

NEW YORK—American teenagers are starting to prefer communicating via text instead of meeting face-to-face, according to a study published on Monday by the independent organization Common Sense Media.

Some 35 per cent of kids aged 13 to 17 years old said they would rather send a text than meet up with people, which received 32 per cent. The last time the media and technology-focused nonprofit conducted such a survey in 2012, meeting face-to-face hit 49 per cent, far ahead of texting's 33 per cent.

More than two-thirds of American teens choose remote communication—including texting, social media, video conversation and phone conversation—when they can, according to the study. In 2012 less than half of them marked a similar preference. Notably, in the six-year span between the two studies the proportion of 13 to 17-year-olds with their own smartphone increased from 41 to 89 per cent.

As for social networks, 81 per cent of respondents said online exchange is part of their lives, with 32 per cent calling it "extremely" or "very" important.

The most-used platform for this age group is Snapchat (63 per cent), followed by Instagram (61 per cent) and Facebook (43 per cent). Some 54 per cent of the teens who use social networks said it steals attention away from those in their physical presence.

Two-fifths of them said time spent on social media prevents them from spending more time with friends in person.

The study was conducted online with a sample of 1,141 young people ages 13 to 17, from 22 March to 10 April.—AFP ■

Rashford gets England back to winning ways over Switzerland

LONDON—England manager Gareth Southgate recognised his side have vast room for improvement despite bouncing back from three consecutive defeats as a much-changed team edged past Switzerland for a 1-0 friendly win thanks to Marcus Rashford's winner.

However, the Three Lions again failed to hit the heights from their World Cup campaign, particularly in a poor first 45 minutes that provoked strong words between the players at half-time.

Southgate, though, did at least stave off an unwanted record of becoming the first England boss to oversee four straight defeats and further puncture the feel-good factor of a run to the World Cup semi-finals.

"It's not been a perfect week by any means but we finish with a win, which is important moving forward," said Southgate.

"We had a tactical problem to sort out and so many lads playing their first 45 minutes of the season," he added of the first-half display.

"It was a tall order to ask them to play against an excellent Switzerland side, they kept the ball well and we had to chase too much. There was plenty of room for improvement." The two teams could have met in the quarter-finals in Russia had the Swiss not limped out of the competition with a whimper to Sweden in the last 16.

England proved far too strong for the Swedes before falling short against Croatia in the last four, but it is Switzerland who have so far bounced back from their World Cup disappointment the stronger.

Vladimir Petkovic's side thrashed Iceland 6-0 to kickstart their Nations League campaign and were the better side for the first 45 minutes at the King Power.

"We could have been two or three nil down at half-time," said England full-back Danny Rose. "It's great we can all shout at each other and tell each other to improve like we did." — AFP ■

Ireland play out Poland draw after Keane controversy

WROCLAW (Poland)—The Republic of Ireland ended a controversial week with a 1-1 friendly draw in Poland on Tuesday as Millwall striker Aiden O'Brien scored on his debut.

Manager Martin O'Neill had to defend his assistant coach Roy Keane after a leaked recording appeared to reveal the former Manchester United captain swearing at midfielder Harry Arter and striker Jonathan Walters as they prepared for matches earlier this year.

Midfielder Arter, 28, has not played international football since.

Having been thrashed 4-1 by Wales in their Nations League opener last Thursday, it looked for much of the second half as though the Irish would secure a morale-boosting win, but Mateusz Klich grabbed a late equaliser for Poland in Wroclaw.

After a slow first 30 minutes, Arkadiusz Milik struck a long-range shot straight at Irish goalkeeper Darren Randolph as Poland struggled to break down a solid Ireland defence without Bayern Munich striker Robert Lewandowski, who was rested despite sitting on 99 international appearances.

The visitors were almost the architects of their own downfall on the stroke of half-time, but after two failed efforts to clear a simple cross into the box, midfielder Grzegorz Krychowiak couldn't force the ball home.

Ireland finally managed their first shot on target early in the second half, with Bristol City midfielder Callum O'Dowda's speculative strike easily held by Wojciech Szczesny.

But that appeared to wake up O'Neill's side, and they grabbed a 54th-minute lead as the 24-year-old O'Brien met an O'Dowda cross to nod past a helpless Szczesny and into the net.

Poland continued to dominate possession without regularly threatening, but Klich played a neat one-two with Milik before slotting home in the 87th minute, despite Ireland calls for an offside flag.—AFP ■

Lukaku bags double as Belgium sweep Iceland aside

REYKJAVIK (Iceland)—Romelu Lukaku scored two goals as World Cup semi-finalists Belgium began their Nations League campaign with a comfortable 3-0 win away to Iceland on Tuesday.

Eden Hazard converted a 29th-minute penalty after a foul on Lukaku, with the Manchester United striker netting a quick-fire second before adding a third in the closing stages.

Lukaku, also on the mark in Friday's 4-0 friendly defeat of Scotland, was brought down by a clumsy tackle from Sverrir Ingason and Hazard rolled the resulting spot-kick to the left of Hannes Halldorsson.

He then got himself on the scoresheet two minutes later by following up a rebound after a powerful Vincent Kompany header was pawed into his path by Halldorsson.

Thomas Meunier struck the outside of the post on the hour, although Belgium ultimately transformed their dominance into a third with nine minutes to play as Lukaku slotted away a fizzing cross from Dries Mertens. — AFP ■

Barcelona, Girona support La Liga request for match in Miami

BARCELONA—Barcelona and Girona have both signed a request for their La Liga fixture in January to be played in Miami.

The formal request was submitted by La Liga to the Spanish Football Federation (RFEF) on Monday, with the support of both Barca president Josep Maria Bartomeu and Girona president Delfi Geli.

The proposal asks permission that the game, originally scheduled as a home match for Girona at their Estadi Montilivi, be played at Hard Rock Stadium on 26 January.

A La Liga statement on Tuesday also said a "compensation package" on offer has been "welcomed" by 'Aficiones Unidas', an association of club fan groups in Spain.

The package is believed to include free flights for up to 1,500 Girona fans, as well as 5,000 tickets for the reverse fixture at the Camp Nou later this month.

As well as the RFEF, La Liga is likely to seek permission from the Spanish sports council and US Soccer Federation, as well as UEFA and CONCACAF, the governing bodies in charge of European and North American football respectively.

La Liga is discussing playing one game per season in the United States as part of a 15-year agreement struck with the media company Relevent. — AFP ■
