Voluntary Elderly Home (Older People's Participation)

Non-profit organisations, in accordance with the law, are not directly controlled by government. They are able to help the elderly population to a certain extent. This is the contribution and support that they provide to the elderly community. They can also provide various services to the elderly, such as home care, day care centres, and voluntary homes. These organisations are usually funded by donations, government grants, and other resources. They have a wide range of services to offer, including emotional support, social activities, and practical assistance. They provide a sense of community and belonging, helping to combat loneliness and isolation among the elderly. They also offer a range of health care services, including medical consultation, nursing care, and physiotherapy. These services are provided by trained professionals, ensuring the highest quality of care for the elderly. These organisations are an important part of the elderly care system, providing a valuable service to the elderly community. They are an important source of support and assistance, and they play a critical role in improving the quality of life for the elderly.
